Time, preparation needed for annual rodeo

By NIKKI KRIEN
Kansas State Collegian

The onslaught of trailers loaded down with horses and tack signifies more than just the start of the K-State Rodeo at Weber Arena.

It signifies the time and effort members of the K-State Rodeo Club give toward their annual event.

Planning for the rodeo starts a year in advance. During the fall semester, students find sponsors and community support for the rodeo.

This semester the club began preparing the arena and finishing advertising sales.

Students make all arrangements without professional help.

The club started implementing things like arrivals of competitors and rodeo stock Thursday, but Friday's rain forced club members to make quick decisions.

To offer what competitors and spectators describe as the best rodeo in the region, students must balance the responsibilities of planning the event with school, practice and other prior commitments.

Countless hours are spent contacting sponsors, perfecting the itinerary and preparing the facilities.

Provisions also must be made to provide the rodeo stock, which is contracted through Rafter H Rodeo Company in Herbert, Okla.

Kandee Kraft, senior in finance and member of the K-State Rodeo Team, served as rodeo co-chair for two years.

"I just do whatever they need me to do," Kraft says.

Kraft said her true affinity for the rodeo is what keeps her motivated to stay involved.

"The most special part of this rodeo is seeing all the little things come together to make it what it is," Kraft said.

Just as the students' dedication is important, rodeo coach Steve Frazier said community support is vital to making the rodeo happen.

"I'm proud to say the community really does support K-State rodeo," Frazier said.

Going under the knife

1/3 of regent universities' budget cut to come from K-State

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

This is the beginning of a series exploring what effects possible state-wide budget cuts would have on K-State colleges.

About $2.1 million of Gov. Bill Graves' $6.1 million budget reduction in the base budget for regent universities will come from K-State.

Provost James Coffman said the university's colleges and additional areas where no teaching occurs are looking at a 2.5-percent cut. As a result, Coffman said, the university has implemented a hiring freeze, which is not necessarily a hard freeze.

The exception will be in areas where an immediate harm from not hiring faculty would exist. He said that priority largely would be based on need and that efforts would be made to limit the effect on students' academic plans.

"Inevitably, it will affect everybody," Coffman said, "but we are trying to minimize the impact it will have on students."

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president, is heading K-State's lobbying effort in the Legislature. She works daily talking with legislators and promoting higher education.

"I try to be visible," Peterson said. "I go to a lot of meetings in committees and then meet one-on-one with legislators."

Peterson said legislators seem to realize there is a problem with the allocations to

Today final day for primary voting

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

Today is the final chance to vote in the Manhattan City Commission primary election that will eliminate one candidate from the running.

In a seven-candidate race for three open commission seats, election rules state a runoff election is to be conducted to narrow the field down to six. As a result, the city of Manhattan will pay nearly $15,000 to fund the primary.

Elections Coordinator Jolene Campbell said

27 polling locations plan to stay open across the city from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. today, snow or no snow.

"No matter what the weather is, we are required by law to be open from 7 to 7," she said.

However, Campbell said, 27 locations does not mean a voter can deposit his or her ballot just anywhere. A voter's polling location is designated according to where he or she resides. Voting elsewhere might mean a vote that isn't counted, no matter how much the voter complains.

"We'll let them vote, but we won't count it," she said.

On the other hand, Campbell said, the staff of the county clerk's office is happy to tell voters where they need to go, either in person at 110 Courthouse Plaza or by calling 565-6200. Those interested in information on candidates can visit www.co.riley.ks.us.

The site lists the candidates and shows a sample ballot.

Aside from that, voters need to bring themselves, an idea of who to vote for and the ability to read and follow instructions, she said.

One very important instruction, she said, is to vote for only three candidates. Though six candidates will move on to the April 3 final election, voting for more than three can invalidate the ballot, she said. Voters are, however, perfectly welcome to vote for one or two as well, Campbell said.

If all goes well, Campbell said results should be known within hours after the polls close and online about the same time.

"I'm hoping to be out of here by 9," she said. "I hope we'll be putting them on as we go."

Hiring freeze already in place

■ Business dean fears proposed budget cuts might affect quality of programs.

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

The temporary hiring freeze in effect across campus is affecting the College of Business Administration. More budgeting concerns could follow if the proposed budget cuts are passed by the Kansas Legislature.

Yar Ebadi, dean of the college of Business Administration, said that these cuts could have a dramatic effect on the college. With enrollment up by 40 percent in the last five years, the college is already short on instructors. Budget cuts, Ebadi said, will mean an even greater shortage.

"This is quite a problem to have. The quality of program we offer may suffer quite dramatically," he said.

The biggest problem the college faces is having to cut classes. Ebadi said this would mean longer waiting lists and more students in classes.

"Proposed budget cuts could have a great impact on us," Brian Niehoff, associate professor of business, said. "The classes we offer could be affected."

The college can request an exception from the hiring freeze. Ebadi said if the college can prove it is detrimental for a position not to be filled, an exception could be offered. However, rumors of the budget cuts might prevent the college from hiring the best instructors.

"Rumors alone may affect hiring. We want the best and brightest. Rumors like this sometimes keep those people from applying for positions," Ebadi said.

Ebadi said the proposed cuts have students and faculty in the college frustrated. He said talk about huge budget cuts like this affect the morality of current faculty.

"We just want to make sure that we are staying focused and optimistic," Ebadi said. "Nothing is set in stone yet."

He said the college is trying to stay optimistic as it develops solutions to deal with the proposed cuts. Ebadi said the college is trying to keep students a priority as they develop ideas.

"Our goal always has been not to delay the graduation of our students," Ebadi said. "These cuts have the potential to impact this goal. We want to make that impact as light as possible."

Human Ecology looks for funding solutions

By RACHEL POWERS
Kansas State Collegian

The College of Human Ecology administration, under the provost's mandate, is in preliminary stages of determining how to make a 4-percent budget cut if legislation finds it necessary.

"If we take cuts, which are still in question, it will be detrimental for students to complete our program of study," said Rita Newell, assistant to the dean in the College of Human Ecology. "We are preparing for a cut by examining all the alternatives. It is a little early to be specific. We are looking at ways to compromise while remaining optimistic."

Newell said the college will try to provide its share of cuts through the five or six current vacant faculty positions in the college. She said all other faculty positions have been frozen. Newell said all positions are critical to the program and a continued cut in faculty might slow students in

Autistic child teaches about life, love

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
Kansas State Collegian

Krista Trecek, graduate student in speech language pathology, began most of her days for the past two years with one of her favorite people.

Trecek was a caregiver for Malcolm Brown, an 8-year-old boy with autism.

"When I first met Malcolm, I didn't know much about autism, but I was intrigued by him and interested in autism in general," she said.

On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, Trecek was at Brown's house by 7:15 a.m. to wake him, bathe and dress him, fix breakfast and walk him to school. After school, Trecek would pick Brown up, give him a snack and participate in activities she had planned.

Trecek said Brown liked puzzles, educational games, computers and outings to children's bookstores, Wal-Mart and Dillons.

Brown was only six when Trecek began working with him. She said he had the greatest effect on her life.

"Through him, I've learned how to love," she said. "I've learned how to love in the way God loves us, and now I love others in that way, while not expecting anything in return."

Christine Depusio, Brown's mother, said Trecek was more of a friend to her son than a babysitter.

"She's very smart, very hardworking and really dedicated to whatever she's doing," she said.

Trecek said she is proud of the improvements Brown has made during the past two years.

"After training him over and over again on things, when he finally did it, it's indescribable," she said.

Trecek would work with Brown on his communication skills and daily living skills, such as brushing his teeth, expanding his short attention span and even familiarizing him with the names of things, such as food items.

She said these all were important lessons for Brown to learn if he ever were able to live on his own.

Friends of Trecek and Brown described him as a precious little boy who loved to play on the computer, watch television, stay up late and sleep in. Yet he's also a challenge.

"He's a typical 8-year-old, but he had autism, and that prohibited him from communicating like everyone else," Megan

JEANEL DRAKE/Collegian

Krista Trecek, graduate student in speech language pathology, helps 8-year-old Malcolm Brown of Mission, Kan., practice talking during their trip to Hastings, where they read books together. Brown is an autistic child who was tutored by Trecek for more than two years.

News of the weird

In 1999, News of the Weird reported on an 82-year-old retired chemist who had been living quite happily in a 200-square-foot room in the downtown Boston YMCA since 1949. In November 2000, former Navy man Orlan Lattimer, 81, finally moved out of his room at the Arlington Hotel in San Francisco, where he says he has lived since 1937. After a while on a waiting list, the city Housing Authority assigned Lattimer a studio apartment (with his first-ever private refrigerator and private bath) about a block from the Arlington.

Hearing for 2nd suspect in shooting scheduled

A preliminary hearing has been set for a man alleged to have provided a weapon used in a shooting outside the Eagle's Club Jan. 21.

A preliminary hearing for Jeremy Ybar Ware, 21, Fort Riley, has been tentatively scheduled for April 24 and 25.

Shaun Leach, a Fort Riley soldier, was killed and K-State student Isabel Amaya, 19, was injured in the shooting.

Anthony Mitchell, 25, has been charged with second degree murder and three counts of attempted second degree murder. Ware is charged with providing a loaded gun to Mitchell.

Security guard testifies rapper did not have gun

NEW YORK — A Times Square nightclub security guard testified Monday that she never saw Sean "Puffy" Combs with a gun the night shots were fired in the crowded club 14 months ago.

But Sharise Myers said she did see the music mogul's protégé, Jamal "Shyne" Barrow, with a gun during the melee at Club New York in the early morning hours of Dec. 27, 1999.

"I saw him firing a gun," she said of Barrow. "I went down to the floor. I fell on top of Mr. Combs, and other people fell on top of me. His (Combs') face looked shocked. His hands were on the floor like the rest of his body."

Asked by defense lawyer Johnnie Cochran, "Did he have a gun in his hands at any time?" Myers replied, "No, he did not."

Just before the shooting, Myers said, Barrow "screamed out a loud obscenity, which drew my attention." She said she saw him firing a gun, and "I went down to the floor."

Three bystanders were wounded.

Myers, who searches female patrons at the club on weekends, also said that Combs and his then-girlfriend Jennifer Lopez were ushered in by club management and were not searched.

Guards did not search all the men entering that night because they were "starstruck," she said.

U.S. blames both sides for Middle East violence

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The State Department faulted both Israel and the Palestinians for Middle East bloodshed on Monday — accusing the Israelis of excessive force and the Palestinians of violent attacks — as Secretary of State Colin Powell wound up a Mideast tour appealing for an end to violence.

The department's annual report on human rights conditions worldwide also said China's record deteriorated last year, with intensified crackdowns on religion, political dissent and "any person or group perceived to threaten the government."

Because of that perceived change, the department announced plans to seek China's censure by the U.N. Human Rights Commission when it convenes for its annual meeting next month.

There were harsh words, too, for the civil war in Colombia, a nation whose President, Andres Pastrana, will meet with President Bush on Tuesday.

The report ranked Iraq and North Korea among the world's worst human rights violators.

On the plus side, the study found a number of advances in human rights, democracy, and fundamental freedoms last year, citing the examples of Yugoslavia, Mexico, Nigeria and Ghana. Another bright spot was the peace agreement that ended a two-year war between Eritrea and Ethiopia.

The congressionally mandated report was released as Powell was winding up visits to Israel, the Palestinian territories and several Arab countries.

"This is the time to bring calm to the region," Powell said after separate meetings Sunday with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and Israeli Prime Minister-elect Ariel Sharon.

Ben Hopper and Eric Engel, student body president and vice president candidates, are running to try to make student's lives less chaotic. Some of the pair's platform issues include technology, diversity and classroom improvements

Hopper, Engel express goals

By COLLEEN FOOTE
Kansas State Collegian

Technology, diversity, increased funding for sport clubs and classroom improvements are some of Ben Hopper and Eric Engel's goals for K-State's future.

Hopper, senior in agricultural communications, said he is running for student body president because he enjoys helping and working with other students.

"I work well with all kinds of people," said Hopper, national president for Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow. "I have a passion and desire to serve and help others."

One of the ways both Hopper and Engel said they want to help students is by improving K-State's technology. K-State might be able to receive an OC3, an optical carrier, which would increase the megabytes-per-second transfer rate when using the Internet from 45 to 155, therefore increasing the size of bandwidth. The candidates said they want to work to bring this equipment to K-State so there will be an increase in the speed and quality of Internet usage.

"Having the best technology is important for all students," said Engel, senior in electrical engineering and vice-presidential candidate. "When talking to students, Ben and I learned that having good technology is necessary for a good education."

Bringing different students, clubs and organizations together from all areas of campus will create more ideas and solutions for K-State, Hopper said.

"One of our issues is to focus on diversity," he said.

"By incorporating diversity throughout campus, we will be bringing different people to the table to get things done."

Justin Schuster, senior in public relations, said Hopper and Engel embody diversity.

"These guys are not your typical candidates you see year in and year out," Schuster said. "They define diversity. Both have different backgrounds, ideas and views."

Increasing funding for sports clubs is a priority for the candidates. Hopper and Engel said they want to increase sport clubs' funding from the Student Governing Association.

"Sports clubs do a wonderful job representing K-State," Hopper said. "There is money that could be used from the student privilege fees to help better fund these clubs."

There would be no increase in the student privilege fees, he said, because this money already exists.

Dry-erase boards, chalkboards, overhead projectors and clocks are some of the classroom items needed for improving the quality of a students' education, Hopper said. The candidates' platform includes solutions to make sure all of K-State's classrooms are equipped with necessary items.

The candidates, who met each other when they were active in the K-State Marching Band, said they think all of their issues are achievable.

"I believe we can get this stuff done," Engel said. "These issues are what students want."

Hopper-Engel's campaign, "How You Do It?" focuses on listening to and learning from students, Engel said. K-State students can learn more about the candidates' biographies, platform issues and other information online at www.ksu.edu/howyoudoit/.

If elected student body president, Hopper said he wants to make students' lives less chaotic.

"Helping students have better advising and providing Internet access will help make their college lives better," he said. "I've achieved my goal if I help one student have a better college life."

Notice being given to those failing to fulfill requirements for graduation

By KAREN MAYSE
Kansas State Collegian

Some students are receiving messages that they are not approved for graduation.

Students in all curricula are dealing with this bad news, which arrives by phone or mail. Although everything might seem in order, oversights sometimes occur.

In the College of Agriculture, about 300 students have applied for graduation, and five to 10 people are short on hours.

"To me, that's not a problem.

It's 'Whoops, we need to get our paperwork in order,'" said Marian Tilford, administrative officer for academic programs in agriculture.

Students must apply for graduation in the same semester they plan to graduate, Tilford said. Students should not apply too early because they might make changes to their course schedules that will affect their ability to graduate. She said the deadline to apply is four weeks after the start of a semester.

About 800 students have applied for graduation from the College of Arts and Sciences, said Diane Barker, transcript specialist for the college. Some of them also will be notified of problems with their transcripts.

These problems fall into three categories — either grades, unfulfilled course requirements or the student has less than 120 hours, Barker said.

"I'm not here to cause a student problems," Barker said. "These are the university rules, and I have to follow them."

The university has established these rules for legal reasons, Barker said. Some students tell Barker an adviser never told a student about some requirements, but she said this is not an acceptable excuse. Students can avoid most problems by reading the university catalog, Barker said.

The university does not assume a student wants to graduate as soon as they have completed degree requirements because some students want to complete additional degrees. Allowing students to graduate before they have completed those other degrees also can affect their financial aid.

Michel Ransom, Faculty Senate president, said students cannot expect to change the requirements. There is a complex process to get approval for changes to the curriculum for a degree program and to establish curriculum for new programs.

"When employers hire someone, they're going to expect that a person has completed a certain number of courses," Ransom said.

Decrease in home sales signals worry; risk of recession increases from autumn

By JEANNINE AVERSA
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. —

Existing-home sales plunged in January to their lowest point in a year as consumers' worries about the economy outweighed the lure of cheaper mortgage rates. Forecasters suggested the economy will experience much slower growth this year than previously thought.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has said a large determinant in whether the flagging economy slips into recession is how consumer confidence holds up during the slowdown.

Sales of previously occupied homes fell for a second straight month by 6.6 percent, the National Association of Realtors reported Monday. That pushed January's sales down to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 4.65 million.

"This results from a decline in consumer confidence and the deteriorating economy," David Lereah, the association's chief economist, said.

Consumer confidence fell for the fourth month in a row in January, hitting its lowest level in four years.

Economists also believed other factors, including stock market volatility, higher energy prices and slower job growth, added further drags to create January's decline in sales.

"Consumers are being cautious. I think they will postpone spending until there is a definitive understanding of the labor market situation."

"That is, until there is a clear understanding that their jobs are safe and sound," said Richard Yamarone, economist with Argus Research Corp.

The 4.65 million existing-home sales rate was the lowest level since the January 2000 rate of 4.54 million rate.

Trying to keep the faltering economy afloat, the Federal Reserve slashed interest rates twice in January, totaling a full percentage point.

The National Association for Business Economics, in a survey released Monday, now said it expects this year's Gross Domestic Product — the output of goods and services produced within the United States — to clock in at 2 percent, which would mark the weakest performance since 1991, when economic output declined by 0.5 percent. In its November survey, the association estimated a 3.4-percent growth rate for all of this year.

The risk of recession this year rose to 33 percent in the February survey of 34 economic forecasters. That was up from a 20-percent level in the November survey.

"The business outlook has clearly deteriorated, and NABE panelists see rising recession risks," said business economics association president Richard Berner, who also is chief economist at Morgan Stanley Dean Witter.

"However, most forecasters believe that the economy will regain its footing by summer, when moderate growth will return."

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics relevant to the publication.

On the Topic

The Kansas Legislature is trying to make it mandatory to register kegs. Should it be required?

Yes, I do believe that the keg registration should be mandatory because this is not only a countywide problem, but it is a statewide problem for underage drinking.

I'm all for registering kegs. But a 30 'Stones party doesn't have the same ring as a kegger.

Why not? It wouldn't affect anyone other than those people who are trying to buy alcohol for minors and then get caught. If they are going to buy alcohol for minors, they should be smart enough to not get caught in the first place, and then the keg registration won't make a difference.

If it becomes mandatory to register kegs we will only have five kegs at our next party instead of 10.

If kegs are registered, will I still be able to buy them with my fake ID?

Is the time it takes to register my keg going to cut into my drinking time?

I can die for my country at 18, but I have to wait until I'm 21 to get a registered keg.

Let them license kegs. I'll just switch to vodka.

Off the Topic

My vote for the worst pothole in Manhattan: College Heights and Denison.

I hope it rains tomorrow so I don't have to know who to vote for.

To the girl whose boyfriend cheated on her the day after Valentine's Day: Would you like to go to lunch with me? You are a real sweetheart. Thanks for the brownies.

To the guy in the blue and red Columbia coat in my World Reg. class: stop cuddling with your girlfriend because it's making me and everybody else in the class sick.

This is for anybody who likes pizza: Do not order from Gumby's pizza. We waited 1 1/2 to three hours last night for a pizza that never came. Gumby's is horrible.

One good snow and no one will know who to vote for.

I was just curious when the city of Manhattan is going to start fixing the craters that we have to drive over every day.

There is nothing better than election fraud at Kansas State University.

Yeah, I just had a seizure looking at all of the sidewalk chalk.

I'm voting for whoever has the least amount of sidewalk chalk.

How you doin'? Well, let me tell you. I'm failing econ, fighting with my parents and broke. How you doin'?

What is wrong with people? I was only explaining to the sidewalk how I was doing, and people looked at me like I had lost my mind.

I'd just like to remind everybody that you have to dial nine to get off campus. I'm tired of having people try to order flowers from Westloop Floral out of my room.

I really hope it doesn't snow because then all of the sidewalk, "Vote for me, please," would be erased. Oh, wait, in that case, let it snow, let it snow, let it snow.

Does anyone else find it deliciously ironic that all our SGA candidates have just finished chalking their first ads on the sidewalk, and it is just starting to rain? I love that.

Question for Thursday

How well have you been prepared by your adviser for graduation?

Searching for peace

Bush should keep distance from Middle East issues

Well, those wacky Middle Easterners are at it again.

With the Feb. 6 election of Ariel Sharon as Israel's prime minister, Israeli-Palestinian tensions tightened another notch. Sharon (read: shuh-ROAN), a conservative hardliner who doesn't want to exchange his "one and only land" for peace, has thrown a little more spice into the already-piquant political stew that is the Holy Land.

Meanwhile, halfway across the world, a new president is trying to make some serious foreign policy decisions. George W. (read: DUB-yuh) Bush has to decide whether to continue former President Bill Clinton's policies in the Middle East or develop his own.

Bush is in quite the dilemma, especially since his victory in November's election was somewhat questionable. He must be careful not to do anything untoward in his foreign policy decisions; any international SNAFU has the potential to alienate him from the pitifully minuscule Republican majority in Congress.

The Israeli-Palestinian situation is a delicate one because we don't want to reignite the old powder keg between the two peoples. Clinton tried peace talks with Israel's former prime minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat and even was able to make them shake hands in 1993.

Despite this hopeful early sign, the peace talks since have proven themselves ineffective at best, with accusations of treachery on both sides of the negotiation table.

Failed peace proposals are nothing new between Israel and the PLO. Ever since the British government's attempt to partition Palestine in 1937, the two factions haven't been able to agree on what should be done with the land.

The U.N. divided Palestine into separate Palestinian and Jewish states in 1947, only to have Zionist leader David Ben-Gurion proclaim Israel an independent state in 1948. In the ensuing conflict, Israel gained sovereignty, and 400,000 Palestinian refugees were displaced.

In 1970, the PLO was expelled from Jordan and moved to Lebanon because of artillery duels with Israeli forces and airline hijackings by Palestinian guerrillas.

In 1982, Israeli troops forced the PLO to relocate again. Arafat maintained throughout this period that the PLO was a government in exile of the "State of Palestine."

Despite the 1993 peace deal that Clinton arranged between Israel and the PLO, there continues to be hostility between Israelis and Palestinians. The most recent example is the current Palestinian uprising that had its roots in Sharon's visit to a mosque in November 2000.

The PLO has been given some land and limited self-rule, but it wants more than that: it desires true independence and a land its people can call their own. The Israelis fear this will entail the loss of their own hard-won land, so the parties are at a diplomatic impasse.

The renewed conflict in Palestine leaves Bush with a serious choice. He could continue to have futile peace talks with Arafat and Sharon; perhaps Bush and Secretary of State Colin Powell will be more effective in negotiations than Clinton and his secretaries were.

The likelihood that this will happen is about the same as that of my getting a date some time in the next seven years (approximately one in one billion).

Alternatively, Bush simply could drop the issue like a flaming weasel. In my humble opinion, this is the better course. It seems we have enough problems here at home without having to worry about other people's problems as well.

Don't get me wrong: I don't like war. As a matter of fact, I loathe it with every ounce of my being. My concern is, we simply can't be of any real use in the Israeli-Palestinian situation. These people have been fighting for 4,000 years, and we can't change that by seating them together at a table and giving them free coffee and donuts.

Each side has very serious grievances against the other, and no simple peace talks will be able to eradicate these grievances. If we try to push them into making peace through compromise, we very well could trigger a long, bloody conflict in the Middle East.

Bottom line: the only thing we can contribute to the volatile political mixture in Palestine is a spark.

Increasing technology, diversity top Hopper's, Engel's priorities if elected by student body

How YOU doin'? How YOU doin' in academics? How YOU doin' in your activities? How YOU doin' at K-State?

We are excited to run for this position to find out how you are doing and to work to improve the quality of education, student life and your university experience.

Here are a few issues we feel will benefit K-State and its students:

K-State has an opportunity to purchase an OC3, an Internet line that would increase the transfer of megabytes per second from 45 to 155. This would increase the speed and quality of our Internet. Students would be able to conduct better and quicker research from the residence halls, on-campus labs or the library.

We have a great grasp on technology, but the OC3 is needed. The OC3 won't be an inexpensive investment. That is why we will lobby in Topeka, work with the administration and find ways of generating funds for this great improvement to K-State technology.

Another issue we feel strongly about is the issue of diversity. It is a hot topic. However, many people do not understand or appreciate the importance of this concept. We want to help students develop an appreciation for diversity and improve their abilities to work in a diverse setting, something employers look for. We are not only talking about diversity of race or ethnicity, but diversity of ideas.

BEN HOPPER

ERIC ENGEL

We represent different ends of campus, come from different backgrounds and have different ideas. But we appreciate our differences and work together to make things happen. We bring a fresh approach and a new enthusiasm to the positions. Our belief is to bring more people to the table. With more people with different experiences, ideas and perspectives, greater things happen.

Sports clubs, like rugby, men's volleyball and the Rodeo Club all represent K-State. They have a lack of funds. Traditionally, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has funded sports clubs, but now it is in the hands of Student Governing Association. We want to increase the amount of money allocated to these clubs so they can continue to represent K-State.

Our roller hockey team is on its way to the National Championship this spring. They will have spent $16,000 by the end of this year. The members of the club have had to spend roughly $14,000 out of their own pockets to compete. This is just an example of how sports clubs need more funds. There would not be an increase in privilege fees. It is just an increase in the allocation from the student activity fund.

Before your next class starts, look around the room. Many of the classrooms at K-State are not equipped with the necessary items for students to learn. We want to make sure all classrooms, labs and lecture halls are equipped with overhead projectors, dry-erase boards, markers or chalk, and things as simple as clocks, everything needed to help you learn. We will work to make these rooms ready to educate you.

We thank the twirlers and the band for their support last Thursday.

Check out our Web site at www.ksu.edu/howyoudoin to learn more about our ideas. Drop us a line at doin@ksu.edu and tell us how you are doing.

We would appreciate your support March 5-7. We have a lot to offer and are excited to serve you!

Stress, activities part of junior's life

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Staying active is part of Amy Turner's life.

"I wouldn't know what to do if I wasn't busy," Turner, junior in political science, said. "It has just become a part of me."

Turner, who attends school full-time, interns at the state capitol, works part-time at a local department store and is an assistant to the coach of debate and forensics at Salina Central High School, said she just has a plan and sticks with it.

"It is really not that bad," she said. "I get into a certain schedule, and everything falls in place. I carry a planner everywhere with me that my friends jokingly refer to as my 'bible' to help keep things straight."

On Tuesday and Thursday, Turner leaves Salina around 6 a.m. to make it to K-State for her 8 a.m. class. Her last class of the day ends at 3:30 p.m. and from there, she said there is always a variety of activities.

"I usually either have to go to work or to the high school for practice," she said.

"If I am lucky, I get to go home and get started on homework or projects that I have coming up."

On Monday and Wednesday, Turner heads to the state capitol to intern for Sen. Paul Feleciano.

"I really like working there," she said. "It helps that I enjoy it because it makes the drive seem less of a big deal."

Feleciano said Turner is vital to his office.

"She is an absolute shining star," he said. "She is dedicated, committed, and it shows in her work. Anyone who drives clear from Salina to spend a couple days a week in my office is either crazy or loves what she does."

After Turner makes it through the weekdays, she said she spends the majority of her weekends coaching debate and forensics.

"I usually travel with them on most of their tournaments," she said, "which takes up Friday and Saturday."

"I don't mind it, because it is something that I enjoy doing."

Turner, who participated in debate and forensics in high school, is an assistant under her former coach, Gary Harmon.

"I have been coaching since 1965, and I have never had a student that was as successful in the area as Amy was," Harmon said. "She was competitive at a champ level after only two years of experience, which is just outstanding."

Harmon said her success in high school is one of the reasons he asked her to help him coach.

"You know you can count on her to do a great job and not let you down."

Turner is enrolled in 15 hours of class time and three hours of internship. She is a junior, but is only in her second year of school. At graduation, it will have only taken her 2 1/2 years.

"I want to graduate early because it is cheaper," she said. "It is not really that stressful because I am used to that level of activity. This schedule is really no big deal."

Turner said stress does start to play a part sometimes.

"Everyone has stress," she said. "It just depends on how you deal with it." When I start to feel real stressed out, I just stop and take a break from whatever I am doing. Usually, I can go right back to the activity. It is just the way I am."

Konza to appear on PBS special in April

By BENJAMIN HODGE
Kansas State Collegian

The Konza Prairie is now featured at the Smithsonian National Museum of Natural History in Washington, D.C. This tall-grass prairie soon will be featured in a PBS film special and a coffee table book.

The exhibit, "Listening to the Prairie: Farming in Nature's Image," has been displayed at the Smithsonian since Nov. 18, 2000, and it will stay at the museum until March 31.

After March 31, the exhibit will continue to be displayed at other museums, Alan Knapp, professor of biology, said.

"This will be a traveling exhibit," Knapp said.

The exhibit is interactive, and it is geared towards people who do not have an agricultural background or an understanding of what goes into putting food on the table, Knapp said.

The Konza Prairie is the only long-term ecological research site included in the exhibit, he said.

The museum exhibit is a comprehensive exhibit, said John Blair, associate professor of biology and researcher with the Konza Prairie long-term ecological research program.

"Listening to the Prairie" will tour throughout the country, Blair said, and the exhibit is a part of the promotion for the PBS program that will feature the Konza.

"They're tied together," Blair said.

The Konza Prairie Station is the largest tall-grass prairie research station in the nation, David Hartnett, Konza Prairie station director, said. The museum exhibit developed out of an effort to make a film about the Konza Prairie.

About three years ago, Hartnett said, several people at the Konza station teamed up with Inland Sea Productions, a Kansas City film production company, in an effort to make a film about the Konza Prairie. Primarily funded by a large grant from the National Science Foundation, Hartnett said the film cost more than $1 million to produce.

The one-hour special, "The Last Stand of the Tall-Grass Prairie," will be televised April 20 on PBS, Hartnett said.

The film will be broadcast once nationwide, and then it will be shown regionally as a companion to the traveling exhibit, Knapp said.

A book with the same title as the film also will be released around April, Hartnett said. Barnes and Noble will publish the book, and the print version of "The Last Stand of the Tall-Grass Prairie" will tell essentially the same story as the film, he said.

Knapp said the book is a coffee table book, and it primarily includes photos.

Working with weather

■ Low temperatures, snowy conditions force Wildcat golfers inside for practice.

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

Except for the miniature variety, golf is an inherently outdoor sport — unless the golfer is from K-State.

In that case, blustery Kansas weather forces the Cats off the greens and into the Brandeberry Indoor Complex, which while spacious, isn't the same as the great outdoors.

As a result, the Cats still needed encouragement prior to the outdoor Mountain View Collegiate in Tucson, Ariz., last weekend.

"I told them a week ago, 'You guys aren't going to forget how to play good golf in a week or 10 days,' whatever the stretch was where we couldn't be outside," head coach Kristi Knight said.

In their first competition in nearly four months, the Cats took fourth in the Collegiate, led by Elise Carpentier's first place finish. The title was the first in her career and just the second in team history.

"I hit the ball well," Carpentier said. "The greens out there were pretty tough. It's tough to judge the distance of the putt. So the fact that I hit the ball not too bad at all — I led myself for short putts for birdies — made it a little bit easier for me."

More impressive, Carpentier's performance came after practicing only five times in the month of February. The key to her and the team's success came in dealing with the conditions.

"Everybody on the team knew that the weather's not nice, and you've got to practice indoors, and you've got to work with that," Carpentier said. "You can't complain about it."

Knight isn't complaining about Carpentier's play, especially after the sophomore's struggles in the fall season, when she placed in the top 30 only once.

"She works very hard on her game. Over winter break, she made a couple of adjustments with her setup with her swing coach back home," Knight said. "She felt like she was going to hit the ball better."

While Carpentier starred last weekend, on another day the title might have gone to a different K-State player, Knight said.

"I think the thing that's exciting about this group of players is that it can be any of them. The four and five this week could be one and two next week, and I kind of like that," Knight said.

That winning trend could continue if the team's success at Arizona is any indicator. The Cats' score of 603 over the 36 holes was the best in team history, and the golfers could have done better," Knight said.

"If you were to talk to them," she said, "they would say that they definitely left some shots out there on the course."

Dedication makes Webb team leader

By DAN SMITH
Kansas State Collegian

She's laced up her sneakers and donned the purple and white for four years now, yet the spotlight rarely has fallen on senior forward Marshela Webb's shoulders.

Webb's career with the Cats will end Wednesday night when K-State plays Baylor, but what the Kansas City, Mo., native has brought to head coach Deb Patterson's program will leave a lasting impression after she's gone.

"I think what's most impressive about Marshela through the course of her career has been that she's always been a great example of work ethic and intensity," Patterson said. "She has stepped up and filled whatever role this team has needed from her."

Webb learned to adapt to those roles early for the Cats. While at Kansas City's Notre Dame de Sion High School, the three-sport star earned All-District 3A honors while playing in the post during basketball season. Webb earned team MVP honors for Sion her final three years and poured in 1,422 points, but almost none of them would come from the perimeter.

At the Division I level, though, Webb's 5-foot-10-inch frame was too short to battle in the paint, Patterson said, so a three-year conversion process to mold her into a perimeter player began.

"As we worked with her the first couple of years, it was with the intent to build those skills," Patterson said, "and that's a real challenging thing to do in Division I."

Webb struggled to find her niche in the Cats' backcourt during her first season at K-State. Competing with more experienced players made the conversion difficult to master, but despite only seeing action only in 14 games, Webb's selflessness and dedication to the team already had begun to overshadow her limited playing time.

"Your freshman year, everything is tough because everything is new and all sorts of things are being thrown at you," Webb said. "But over the years, roles get defined, and you have what you have and you contribute to the team with whatever you can."

What Webb could contribute to the Cats was heart. Although a good player in high school, Webb never was a commanding force in the metro basketball scene, Patterson said. What made her a special basketball player were the things stats couldn't reveal.

"She brought a lot of the intangibles that help solidify and strengthen a program and we felt like, with her work ethic and athleticism, her game skills would continue to evolve," Patterson said.

As a sophomore, Webb continued to battle for playing time but saw only 72 minutes. Webb broke out of her shell a bit in her third season, pulling down 34 rebounds and recording 12 assists. Still, despite limited chances and a tough new position, Webb has continued to work hard to help the team, Patterson said.

"She's demonstrated the quality of her character in that even when she hasn't gotten that pot of gold, she has shown up every day and worked as hard as anybody we've ever had in this program," Patterson said, "and I look at that with the utmost respect."

Respect turned into playing time when Patterson looked to Webb for a defensive spark by starting her against Texas A&M on Feb. 20 and Colorado on Feb. 24.

"I was excited to see her get the opportunity," senior guard Morgen Finneran said. "To have that opportunity was awesome because I feel she's paid her dues. She deserved it."

With her years at K-State coming to a close, Webb is content with the results of her career. She is happy for her time at K-State and now looks forward to applying what she's learned on and off the court to the business world.

"Everything that has happened to me here has allowed me to grow and mature as a person," Webb said. "I'm grateful that I was chosen to be part of this program."

Track teams take 3rd, 4th at Big 12 meet

By ERIKA SAUERWEIN
Kansas State Collegian

Junior Austra Skujyte high jumps, can throw the shot put more than 48 feet and can reach a mark of 19 feet in the long jump.

And she can do it while injured.

Skujyte's first-place finish in the pentathlon helped the women's track team to a third-place finish at the Big 12 Conference Indoor Track and Field Championships last weekend in Lincoln, Neb. The men placed fourth in the meet.

"It feels good to win the first event," said Skujyte, who compiled 3,935 points in the event. "After I sprained my ankle, I was kind of afraid to compete today. I didn't know how I would do. I just wanted to come out strong."

The women's team tallied 104 points in its third-place finish. The Wildcats finished just 1.5 points behind Texas. Nebraska took home the title with 143.5 points. Head coach Cliff Rovelto said Skujyte was a contributor to K-State's success.

"That is really a remarkable feat for her," he said.

"She has been out for so long with her injury. She wasn't able to sprint and do hurdles for a while, then she comes back from the pentathlon with no rest and throws a personal record in the shot put."

"From looking at what people contributed and team effort, her performance stands out, and she is not even close to being healthy."

Korene Hinds was K-State's lone winner on the track. She won the 1,000 meters in a time of 2:44.7 seconds. She set a meet and a personal record in defending her title. Hinds also took fifth place in the 3,000 meters.

In the field events, Rovelto said Queeneth Evurunobi, Rebekah Green, Terresha Derossett and Skujyte had the standout performances.

"Those four really contributed this weekend," Rovelto said. "Korene and the four field athletes were the highlights of the weekend."

Redshirt freshman Green placed first in the shot put by throwing 53 feet, 3 3/4 inches. Her throw beat Nebraska's Leann Boerema mark by more than a foot. Derossett placed third in the pentathlon by jumping a NCAA provisional qualifying mark of 5 feet, 11 1/4 inches in the high jump. Evurunobi placed second in both the long jump and the triple jump. Her long jump of 19 feet, 4 3/4 inches was the best mark in the event until the final jump when Oklahoma's Janel Hayes jumped two inches further to claim the title.

Despite placing third, Rovelto said overall the women's team had a good weekend.

"Realistically, we thought Nebraska had about a 20-point difference with us to begin with," Rovelto said. "The meet ended up being more than that, but we were within the five points that we thought we should be at. By coming within five points, I think that we pretty much took care of business."

The men's team compiled 75 points in its fourth-place finish. Nebraska won the men's side of the meet, finishing with 124 points. Texas A&M and Texas took second and third, respectively.

"There were places where we let points get away to be able to place second," Rovelto said. "But still, it is an improvement overall to go into the meet and get fourth. This is probably the best conference in the country."

Junior Shadrack Kimeli won the 3,000 meters with a time of 8:13.61. Kimeli also took second in the mile earlier in the meet. Terence Newman set a NCAA-provisional mark and claimed a K-State school record in the 200 meters. Newman, who also plays football, placed third in a time of 21.20 seconds.

"It is not easy to do both football and track," Rovelto said. "We only get him a couple days a week. This is only his fourth meet this year, so he has not run a lot. His performance was very impressive. He is enormously talented."

Although K-State didn't finish in the top three, the team claimed its best finish in the five-year history of the Big 12 Indoor Championships. Last year, the team placed ninth.

The track athletes now go their separate ways. Several are preparing for last-chance meets this weekend in an attempt to gain NCAA-qualifying marks. Those who have qualified are preparing for the NCAA Indoor National Championships at the University of Arkansas on March 9-10.

Despite XFL's failures, NFL could learn some things to add excitement to game

The XFL is floundering.

If the XFL was a sitcom, it would be off the air. When no one watches your program, you get canceled. Just ask the cast of "Suddenly Susan."

However, what the XFL lacks in excitement it makes up for in innovation.

The fledgling league might be more bark than bite, but a few of its rulebook adjustments just might be worth adopting.

The NFL should take a page from the XFL rule book when it comes to "bump-and-run" coverage. "Bump-and-run" refers to allowing defenders to have contact with receivers. In the NFL, defenders can "bump" the receiver for the first five yards past the line of scrimmage. In the XFL, the defenders are allowed to maintain contact all the way down the field until the receivers get past the defenders or until the ball is thrown.

This type of coverage was eliminated from the NFL to help promote more scoring and more free-flowing offenses (see: St. Louis Rams). Unfortunately, more offense doesn't always mean more exciting games (see: Rams). Bump-and-run coverage makes games closer and the downfield battles much more interesting.

In 1988 the NFL changed the length of the play clock from 30 seconds to 45 seconds. In 2001, the XFL rolled the clock back to 35 seconds. That means the offense has 35 seconds from the time the referees spot the football to snap it. With the exception of a few overtime games, the shorter clock has led to swifter games. I don't think the NFL should cut the clock back to 30 seconds, but a reduction to 40 seconds would help speed up the game.

The permission of celebrations in the XFL has also been a change for the better. Sure, nobody likes taunting, but who doesn't like to see a player celebrate after a great play?

Even in the XFL, where celebrations not only are allowed, they are encouraged, the post-touchdown dancing is relatively tame. I've always said that a team should let the scoreboard do the taunting for them.

However, if a guy wants to show us his version of the "Booty Call" when he grabs a touchdown, I've got nothing against it.

While the XFL has shown us some changes that will work in the NFL, it has also shown us a few things that the NFL should avoid.

The XFL has proven to us that "halo" rules on punt returns don't work. The punt returner is given a two-yard radius to catch the punt. The problem with this rule is that there is no way a referee can accurately gauge whether or not a player was within the allotted two yards. Teams with great punt returners (see: David Allen) constantly have opponents violating the halo because the infraction only results in a five-yard penalty.

The XFL gives punt returners a five-yard halo to catch the punt. This rule results in numerous penalties that slow the pace of the game and creates a frustrating situation for players who have to rely on a referee to accurately gauge the five-yard radius.

The elimination of the "fair-catch" rule is also a terrible idea. It doesn't produce the smash-mouth hits that the league promised, and it takes away an important element of the game.

Finally, the XFL has shown us the game itself is paramount. The cheerleaders, fireworks, in-your-face interviews and pregame antics are peripheral to the game. I don't care if a guy has "Hurricane" on the back of his jersey. People won't watch if we're always in the eye of the storm.

No action means no viewers.

We can thank Vince McMahon for proving that true fans watch football for the game. Casual fans focus on the uniforms and the cheese dip.

Take a good look at the XFL while it lasts. It's a sorry sight indeed, but it might just be a sight that makes us think harder about football.

For that, we should be grateful.

LOCAL TALENT

WHO: Danielle Musick, senior in applied music

MUSICK

Danielle Musick has been studying operatic singing since high school, and she will appear in the K-State production of "The Tender Land."

Musick said she looks forward to chances to perform and has also appeared in K-State productions of "Elixir of Love," "Showboat," and "Cabaret." She won the K-State Aria Concerto Contest in February 2000.

Hopefully, those who come to see operatic performances walk away appreciating a kind of art form new to them, she said. Musick said it is rewarding to work with many people on a project like "The Tender Land."

With aspirations to perform professionally after studying in New York, Musick said she takes her singing seriously.

The best part of performing is becoming the character, Musick said.

"For two or three hours each night I get to become a different person with a different background, and it's just a cool experience," she said.

Aroma Therapy

Cigar girl works nights filled with crowds, pick-up lines

By JI DUNCAN

Kansas State Collegian

Maneuvering through the crowded interior of an Aggieville club with an awkward tray of tobacco products has become second nature for Kristen Bruce.

Bruce, junior in international marketing and Spanish, has been working in Aggieville as a cigar girl for more than a year. After a while, she picked up on the little things, she said. The best route through a crowd, good relations with the bouncers, who the best tipsters will be and dealing with drunks.

"Sometimes guys come up to me, and they ask, 'How much for cigarettes?' and I'll tell them," Bruce said. "Then they'll say 'Well, how much for you?' and I say 'Priceless.'"

The job sounded interesting to Bruce when she met a girl who introduced her to the idea, she said. So when a position was advertised in the paper, she jumped at the opportunity.

"My first impression of the job was that you're being paid to have fun," she said. "I get to meet bouncers, bartenders and regulars. Since I wasn't 21 when I started, it was nice to be able to go in and talk to some of my older friends."

So far it has lived up to her expectations, and Bruce said the work suits her personality.

"I'm very independent, outgoing and people-oriented," she said. "And I'm able to take all the bull that some drunks dish out."

Good people skills are obviously a must for the job, Heath Polkinghorn, owner of the business, said. When hiring employees, Polkinghorn said he looks for someone who can relate to people and is at least a little unique as far as personality and style. Not just anyone is cut out for the job, Polkinghorn said.

"It's not the best job for someone who's shy," he said. "Some girls do it once and hate it. They just can't take it. 'Some girls love it and end up doing it for years — like Kristen has been doing this for just over a year now.'"

Working as a cigar girl is fun but takes a certain amount of work, Becky Friesen, junior in animal science, said. Friesen, Bruce's roommate, said Bruce is perfect for the job.

"I think it takes some dedication to go out there every night, because if I had to do it, I would be a wuss," Friesen said. "There would be nights I wouldn't do it just because it's raining or because it's cold."

The weather isn't the only concern. Dealing with the bar crowd is always different so it keeps the job interesting, Bruce said. Of course, with the attention brought to her, it isn't uncommon to get hit on. While it may be flattering at times, Bruce said she wouldn't want to date a guy she met while working.

While most people are polite and helpful, Bruce said some people can be obnoxious, so it helps that she knows many of the bouncers. She often gives them mints as she walks through the bars, and says hi to those she knows by name.

"I get to be good friends with all the bouncers because I know they're there to help me," she said. "One time these two guys were arguing over who was going to pay for cigarettes, and they were getting louder and louder. One of the bouncers came over and asked if I needed him to kick the guys out."

Polkinghorn said he began the business four years ago after getting the idea from the cigar girls in Kansas City area casinos. It was relatively easy to work out agreements with the many bars in Aggieville since Polkinghorn had been a bartender for the four previous years.

"Since I used to be a bartender I knew many of the owners," he said. "I just talked to them and got verbal agreements, and they were all for the idea. They're behind it because it keeps people in the bar since they don't have to leave for cigarettes."

Polkinghorn built the trays himself for employees to use and stocked them with various types of cigars and cigarettes. Though it took a little while to figure out the right mix of things to keep stocked, Polkinghorn said he feels like he has the right mix now.

Still, Bruce said she's sometimes asked for items they don't carry, like chewing tobacco, which they stopped keeping on the trays because of the short expiration dates. Some items people ask for just have never been stocked on the tray, Bruce said.

"I get asked for condoms all the time," she said. "I should take a handful of those condoms from Lafene and charge for them."

Keeping a sense of humor about work is an important aspect of the job that Bruce pulls off well, Friesen said.

Laughing at the incident, Bruce admits to at least one instance where she sold a questionable item.

"We used to sell mini glow sticks for your mouth," she said. "One time this guy came up and asked 'how much for a glow stick?' I said, 'It's $2.'"

"Then he asked 'How much for the one in your mouth?' I told him it wasn't for sale, so he offered $10, and I told him no. Then he offered $20, and I gave in. I handed it to him and got my 20 bucks."

Recount finds minimal gain

The Associated Press

MIAMI — A media-sponsored recount of 10,644 uncounted ballots in Miami-Dade County found a gain of only 49 votes for Al Gore, suggesting he would not have picked up enough votes to win the presidential race.

The results in Miami-Dade are the first in a statewide ballot review carried out by BDO Seidman, an accounting firm hired by The Miami Herald, USA Today and Herald owner Knight Ridder.

The review was of undervotes that were not counted by machines in the initial statewide count. Gore's 49-vote gain was based on the most lenient method of interpreting the challenged punch card ballots.

Even combined with Gore's gains in recounts in Broward, Palm Beach and Volusia counties, the former vice president would not have overcome a Bush lead that was certified Nov. 17, the newspapers reported Monday.

"There were many people who expected there was a bonanza of votes here for Al Gore, and it turns out there was not," Herald Executive Editor Martin Baron said.

"We've never thought it's been in doubt," White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said. "The overwhelming majority of the American people have moved on. This election has been resolved a long time ago."

The four counties used punch card ballots, which state lawmakers are considering eliminating in favor of optical scanners for the 2002 election in all 67 Florida counties.

Based on the Miami-Dade results, if state election officials had allowed South Florida counties to complete manual recounts before certifying November's election, George W. Bush likely would have won without the weeks of turmoil.

The critical decision to reject any late-arriving vote recounts was made by Secretary of State Katherine Harris, co-chair of the Bush campaign in Florida.

She said she would not accept any results after the Nov. 14 deadline set by state law for counties to report vote totals, even though a Leon County judge had ruled earlier that she had the discretion to do so.

Only Volusia County had completed its recount by Harris' deadline, resulting in 98 net votes for Gore. When she announced those totals, Bush led by 300 votes, and on Nov. 17, after overseas ballots were counted, she certified Bush's victory margin of 930 votes.

Bush would have stayed in the lead, the review of Miami-Dade ballots suggests, had Harris simply revised her initial certification when recounts came in from the three other counties.

Those results would have given Gore 790 net votes — 567 from Broward, 174 from Palm Beach and 49 from Miami-Dade. Bush still would have been the victor by 149 votes, the Herald reported.

After a series of lawsuits and countersuits, the Florida Supreme Court extended the deadline to Nov. 26. Even then, Harris refused to accept Palm Beach's results, which were two hours late, and would not accept a partial vote tally by Miami-Dade officials, who had halted their recount.

Harris did factor in new results from other counties and certified a Bush victory by 537 votes out of about 6 million votes cast.

The rejection became central to Gore's contest of the election, which led to the Florida Supreme Court ordering a statewide recount of the undervotes.

That ruling was blocked by the U.S. Supreme Court, ending the election but not the mistrust caused by the incomplete hand recounts of the undervotes.

BDO Seidman found that 1,555 Miami-Dade ballots were marked in a manner that might be interpreted as a vote for Gore.

An additional 1,506 bore some kind of marking that might be interpreted as a vote for Bush. There were 106 markings for other candidates.

No markings for president were found on 4,892 ballots, and 2,058 ballots bore markings in spaces that had been assigned to no candidate. An additional 527 ballots were deemed to have markings for more than one presidential candidate.

Republicans said BDO Seidman's results indicated that Bush was always the legitimate winner. President Bush was lawfully elected on Election Day. He won after the first statewide machine recount," said Mark Wallace, a Miami lawyer for the Republican Party.

Democrats said the review shows neither side could have known how the recounts would turn out. "This underscores how unpredictable the whole recount strategy was, on both sides," Doug Hattaway, former Gore campaign spokesman, said.

A research firm hired by several news organizations, including The Associated Press, The Washington Post, and The New York Times, is reviewing 180,000 Florida ballots that did not register a vote for president during machine counts.

Wichita group donates new car to kick off annual KSU Telefund

By RACHEL POWERS
Kansas State Collegian

Forty-five people helped pay for the 2000 amethyst-colored Dodge Neon that will be given to one K-State student April 6 as the grand prize for the KSU Foundation Telefund.

In a drawing, the four-door vehicle with Powercat decals on its bumper along with $30,000 in Parents Telefund Scholarships and other prizes, will be given to K-State students who volunteered for at least one complete calling session at the annual Telefund.

"We have been giving cars away for five years," Telefund Director Gordon Dowell said. "For the last three years we have been able to have a new Dodge Neon as the grand prize thanks to the Wichita Area Big Wheels."

The Greater Wichita Area Big Wheels is a group of 47 people from Wichita and the surrounding area. Each year the group donates between $10,000 and $11,000 to purchase a car. Red Skelton and his wife, Elaine, who moved to Wichita in 1986 after Red retired from the Air Force, started the group three years ago with Dowell's help.

"We approached members of the Presidents Club," Red Skelton said. "We explained the need for help. Then we sent out letters asking members to donate funds for the car."

"We wanted to encourage student participation and thought a bigger prize, a car, would encourage more students to help with the Telefund."

Skelton said he was grateful for the education he received because he was in the military. Creating the Wichita Area Big Wheels has allowed him to pay back what he got for free, he said.

Although Skelton is not a graduate of K-State, he said he enjoys helping in any way he can.

"We are big football fans. That is how this all started," he said. "Every year it seems we just evolve and expand from there. I have to give."

Steve Twietmeyer, of Cheney, Kan., is a 1977 K-State pre-dentistry graduate. He and his wife, Rebecca have been Wichita Area Big Wheels contributors since its creation.

"I thought the group was a good idea," Twietmeyer said. "I think a car is a good incentive for students to volunteer their time at the Telefund, and I am amazed at how many do so. It's a cute little purple car. Who wouldn't want to be involved?"

Twietmeyer said he is thankful for the education he received at K-State.

"This is just my way to give back," he said. "K-State has an excellent student body. I think the Telefund has helped make K-State more premiere."

Jim Tadtman, a 1967 K-State civil engineering graduate, donates to Big Wheels because he said he sees students benefit.

"This is only one of many areas that I contribute to at K-State," Tadtman said.

"It is exciting to see students involved and active with the fund raising at Telefund."

Dowell said 1,437 names were entered in the drawing for the grand prize last year.

"The car is an added bonus," he said. "It is unique because no other school gives a car away."

"When I go to conferences for fund raising, people come up to me and say 'You're the guy at the school with the car.'"

Krista Trecek, graduate student in speech language pathology, works with 8-year-old Malcolm Brown during their trip to Hastings, where they read books together. Brown is an autistic child who was tutored by Trecek for more than two years. During that time she helped him with his social skills.

Mace, senior in music ministry, said.

She said that like all children with autism, Brown could be extremely hyper and, at times, became difficult to control—especially in public.

"When he got mad, he used his body instead of telling us," Mace said. That's where Trecek came in.

"He accepted her discipline very well, and he loved her," she said. "She's invested a lot of time in him."

Trecek said at first, public outings were difficult because Brown would throw tantrums, and people would be quick to judge and not take the time to understand.

"Malcolm looked normal, but if you observed him for 45 minutes, you knew there was something wrong," she said. "It used to make me sad when I'd hear bad comments come from people who didn't want to understand."

Even when remarks would fly and Brown would become tiresome, Trecek never let it discourage her.

"I considered them minimal struggles, and everything was worth it because of the end result," she said.

The result, she said, was what Brown had taught her.

"He reminded me that I'm probably exhausting to others at times, and they put up with me and still love me," she said.

She said those struggles were put into perspective when she looked at the big picture.

"I want so bad for him to be able to function and do what a normal 18-year-old can do someday," she said. "He, himself, is a huge motivation factor, and this was truly why I was there."

Trecek said she enjoyed spending a lot of extra time with Brown. Often, she brought him to her house to play, which gave him the opportunity to interact with her roommates.

"They all adored him and knew that he was such an important part of my life," she said.

Mace, being Trecek's roommate, said he's become a big part of her life as well.

"People are eager to love him and include him," Mace said.

Not too long ago, Trecek and her friends had to say goodbye to Brown. He and his mother moved to Kansas City so Brown could be a part of a speech pathology program.

"It's bittersweet," Trecek said. "I'm sad because he left, but I'm thankful because he'll be learning."

Mace said it will be hard on Trecek.

"We've all grown to love him and his mom equally," she said. "We wanted him to continue learning, but it was hard because we wished we could train his new teachers on what he liked and didn't like. We just wanted the best for him."

Before he moved, Trecek was forced to evaluate her relationship with Brown.

"I've been trying to figure it out for myself," she said. "I miss him when I don't see him, so I've gone over and visited him a lot lately."

Trecek said that when she first began working with Brown, he didn't know how to say "I love you."

"When I saw him the other night, he hugged me and wouldn't let go," she said. "I said that I loved him, and now he can say 'I love you' back."

Trecek said as a result of all the time she worked with Brown, she knew how to get him to do what he was supposed to. He knew what he could get away with, and she knew what made him tick.

After the move, Trecek was able to spend a weekend with him—the first since his leaving Manhattan.

"When I began this, my job title was a supportive home care provider," she said. "Now, we're the greatest of friends."

higher education, but the difficult part is finding a way to plug the budget hole.

Don Brown, communications director for Graves, said the governor's budget strictly is a working budget and is set up to allocate all of the funds available.

The proposal then goes to the Legislature and now is being negotiated and worked through in different committees. A final budget might not come until late April or the end of Legislature.

"We won't know the actual budget until probably the last day of the Legislature," said Dick Carter, external relations director for the Kansas Board of Regents.

Not knowing is a situation that Coffman said makes his job difficult.

"We are kind of in a schizophrenic state. We are trying to get the budget reduction restored, and at the same time are making plans to deal with it as it occurs," Coffman said.

Coffman said those potential cuts were a result of meetings with deans and faculty leadership. The colleges, he said, are looking at a projected cut of $3 million. In addition to the base-budget cut, the technology match fee has yet to be renewed and the university is currently over its utilities budget by more than $1.5 million.

"We are proposing more money this year than we did last year," Brown said. "They have seen an increase in the additional amounts of money they need that is not in the state budget."

The state delegated $552.8 million to higher education during the current year and $559.7 million for next year's states general budget, Brown said. However, the cut in the base portion of the budget is less.

K-State Budget Director John Struve said this cut is more serious because of its permanence.

Additional costs to higher education in the form of increasing costs of benefits such as health care are costing the regent schools more money, Carter said.

All the cuts, officials said, are a result of lagging revenue that could be attributed to recent tax cuts in the state. Brown said tax cuts have been known to stimulate revenue in the economy, and the potential cuts can even out with increased growth in revenue.

completing their degrees.

"I worry about not filling positions and the impact on the students and their ability to graduate in four years," Virginia Moxley, associate dean in the college, said. "If we advertise a four-year program they should be able to get through the program in that time."

Moxley and Newell said accreditation in the college also might be a concern if the budget cut is mandated.

"Looking long-term, a cut like this may affect our accreditation," Newell said. "It is possible we may lose it, which will greatly affect the students trying to move through our program. It is our greatest fear. The college would be faced with its most difficult choice."

If the college's budget is cut, Moxley and Newell said students would be greatly affected.

"There is no way to take a cut like this and not affect the students," Moxley said. "Seats may be harder to get in classes. It would impact students at the freshman and upper-class levels."

Moxley said that at this point, it is premature to make any official adjustments in advising students about schedule conflicts or changes.

Moxley said she knew the state revenue is tight, and it would be difficult to fix the problem.

"The budget cut is an implication," Moxley said. "A 4-percent cut is enormously significant. I believe it is in our best interest to do what we can to restore funding to maintain the best interest of students."

Wooldridge reprimanded by Big 12 office

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Jim Wooldridge received a public reprimand Tuesday from Big 12 Conference Commissioner Kevin Weiberg for comments made on the officiating following Saturday's K-State/Oklahoma State game in Stillwater.

The Cats' head coach drew a technical foul with 1:25 left in the first half after officials failed to call a foul when point guard Larry Reid was shoved in an attempt to penetrate to the basket.

After the game, Wooldridge demonstrated the incident to the media, showing that Reid's push backward closely resembled a forearm shiver in football. According to reports from The Kansas City Star, Wooldridge was quoted as saying the call on Reid was not made because K-State is wallowing near the bottom of the Big 12 Conference standings instead of hovering near the top. "In every game we play, every last one of them, that's a foul," Wooldridge said to a Star reporter. "You do that to (Iowa State's) Jamaal Tinsley, and it's a foul. (Against us) I don't think it's going to get called. I am sorry, but I believe that. That's just the way it is right now.

WOOLDRIDGE

"If you're fighting for a championship in this league, they're going to call a foul. That non-call right there says a lot."

The Star said Wooldridge even said the official was in perfect position to make the call, but didn't.

"(The officials) are going to walk out of here, and that's fine. They're going to go call games. That's fine," Wooldridge said in post-game interviews. "But that guy knows (it was a foul). He was standing right there, and he saw it."

"That's wrong." Wooldridge and athletics director Max Urick spoke with Weiberg, associate commissioner Britton Banowsky and assistant commissioner Kim Anderson via Monday's conference call, and Wooldridge later was cited by the conference for violating the Big 12's Principles and Standards of Sportsmanship bylaws. No fine was administered in the matter.

Weiberg issued the following statement on the situation: "Coach Wooldridge's assertion that teams receive different officiating based on their position in the conference's standings is very inappropriate and is not true. The officials that work our games also work in other major conferences and conduct themselves with a high level of professionalism."

"Officials sometimes miss calls, but I have the utmost confidence in their ability and the overall management of our officiating program."

Section 7 of the Big 12 Conference's Principles and Standards of Sportsmanship reads as follows: "Coaches, student-athletes and administrators shall not make public comments critical of officiating. Concerns related to officiating shall be forwarded to the Conference for review and response..."

The Star reported Wooldridge had no intent on protesting to the league office, though, because he said it doesn't do any good.

Chi Omega faces hazing allegations

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

Allegations of hazing against K-State's Chi Omega sorority prompted action to be taken this month.

Due to the hazing allegations filed Feb. 6, Chi Omega has been placed on social and educational probation, said Katie Scheer, Panhellenic Council president. Since probationary terms aren't defined in a document, it is up to each house to determine the punishment for various types of hazing.

With social probation, the house against which the allegations have been filed is prohibited from participating in all-greek events or events with another chapter. With educational probation, meanwhile, internal programs designed for chapter growth are discontinued for a certain period of time.

Hazing, as defined by the Greek Affairs Hazing Policy, includes "any instance of physical abuse, psychological abuse or improper obligations, requirements or time restrictions associated with or involving new members."

Neither the president of Chi Omega nor the chapter's executive headquarters could be reached for comment, and both Greek Affairs and Scheer declined to comment on the specific incidents surrounding the hazing allegations.

Engineering could have to cut back

By CRISTINA JANNEY
Kansas State Collegian

The College of Engineering might have to cut classes, leave faculty positions vacant and significantly cut its operating budget if the governor's budget for next year is passed.

"It certainly will mean faculty will have to work longer hours," dean Terry King said. "There could be bigger classes. There is always the potential that students could be delayed in graduation."

David Fritchen, Department of Architectural Engineering and Construction Science, said those delays in graduation could be up to a year.

"We hold important undergraduate education," he said. "We will protect that as best we can."

The operating budget for Fritchen's department barely is enough to pay for the phone bill, he said.

Operating budgets pay for things like phone bills, copying, office supplies and faculty travel. The department has an operating budget of $23,000 for 668 students.

The department has stopped sending faculty to professional conferences and doing professional development.

This hurts the department in two ways, he said.

Sharron Washington finishes up her afternoon dance class with a conga line to the door. Each week Sharron and her daughter Jennie split teaching 36 classes at Manhattan's Washington Dance Studio.

A dancing tradition

Mother, daughter work together to teach students techniques

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

Jennie Washington Stout received her first baller lesson from her mother, Sharron, when she was 3 years old.

Back then, Sharron Washington didn't know if her only child also would want to teach dance lessons some day.

Today, 23 years later, Jennie and Sharron co-direct Manhattan's Washington Dance Studio.

"Of course, I went through a rebellion phase when I was younger and thought, 'I don't know if I want to do this because of my mom,'" Jennie said.

But that phase didn't even last a year.

"When I got older, I realized I couldn't be complete without it in my life," she said.

Sharron realized her daughter possibly would follow in her footsteps when Jennie was a sophomore at K-State.

"I remember when she said, 'You know, the only time I'm happy is when I'm here at the studio teaching,'" Sharron said.

Observing her mom's happiness from teaching dance influenced Jennie, she said.

"I saw how fulfilled she was by it and realized I needed to carry out my passion for dancing by teaching," Jennie said.

The Washington Dance Studio has been directed by Sharron for 30 years, and Jennie became co-director shortly after she graduated from K-State in 1997 with a humanities degree in dance, business and English.

The mother-daughter pair has no trouble splitting up work at the studio.

Bush touts tax cut in 1st State of Union address

By RON FOURNIER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C.—President Bush beckoned a divided Congress on Tuesday night to support a large and retroactive tax cut, declaring in a nationally televised address, "The people of America have been overcharged, and on their behalf, I am here asking for a refund."

On the 39th day of his presidency, Bush pledged to set the nation on a different path by slashing federal debt while increasing spending for popular programs such as education, environmental protection and health research. Bush, the first Republican president since Dwight D. Eisenhower to address a

BUSH

Bush appeared relaxed and confident during his 49-minute speech, receiving several standing ovations from Republicans and polite applause from Democrats throughout.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff, several Cabinet members and one Supreme Court justice, Stephen Breyer, joined lawmakers in the historic House chamber for the annual ritual. Applause and standing ovations began on one side of the aisle and rippled to the other — depending on the politics of the issue.

Making the case of his $1.6 trillion, 10-year tax cut plan, Bush said: "Some say my tax plan is too big." Democrats cheered the line, making clear they agreed.

"Others say it is too small," Bush said, drawing applause from Republicans. "I respectfully disagree. This tax relief is

Not even the pageantry of the moment — both houses of Congress, diplomats and Cabinet officials assembled — could extinguish all echoes of last fall's recount.

There were audible boos on the Democratic side of the aisle as justices of the Supreme Court were announced. It was a reaction to the Supreme Court's 5-4 decision that stopped recounts in Florida and handed the presidency to Bush.

Standing before a Congress often mired in gridlock, Bush said, "Let us agree to bridge old divides," though he added, "Bipartisanship is more than minding our manners — it is doing our duty."

Night classes cancelled due to heavy snowfall

Evening classes beginning at 4:30 or later on the Manhattan campus were canceled Tuesday. Cheryl May, media relations and marketing director, said the decision was made at 3:15 p.m. Tuesday by President Jon Wefald and Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance. All K-State evening classes at Fort Riley also were canceled.

May said the decision was made because travel was not safe. She said administrators were attentive to the weather throughout the day.

"I think that's always the case," she said. "Student safety is No. 1 priority."

There was no indication that weather would affect Wednesday's classes, May said. She said Rawson, Wefald and the K-State Police would make additional decisions.

Primary voting hindered by inclement conditions

Snow and sleet falling around Kansas on Tuesday was expected to hamper voter turnout in primary races around Kansas.

Saline County Clerk Don Merriman figured he might be trekking around town in his Mercury Mountaineer on Tuesday, picking up stranded election workers if the snow storm makes for hairy traveling conditions.

"Someone asked me if I would supply snowmobiles, but I don't think I've got that in my budget," Merriman said at a meeting with election judges.

Salina-area voters have a primary for the city commission and school board.

Merriman told the judges to call him if they couldn't get to polling places Tuesday. He said he'd try to pick them up or get another staff member with a four-wheel drive vehicle and a shovel to do it.

Merriman had been hoping for a 20-percent voter turnout, but that was before the storm forecast. "It is all speculation at this point," he said, shaking his head. "Sometimes the (forecast) itself scares away the voters."

Gas Service to pay bill for Hutchinson blasts

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — Kansas Gas Service will pay a nearly $80,000 bill that was submitted to the city for well-control services provided during a natural gas emergency.

The bill for $79,659 was from Cudd Pressure Control Inc. for services from Jan. 17 to Jan. 25.

Natural gas explosions in Hutchinson on Jan. 17 and 18 took two lives, prompted an evacuation of some east-side areas, and caused property damage. A gas leak from Kansas Gas Service's Yaggy underground storage facility is suspected as the cause.

"If the city had not retained Cudd to do this work, Kansas Gas Service would have done so," wrote Kansas Gas Services western region vice president Larry Fischer, who noted in his letter to City Manager Joe Palaciaz that the company hired Cudd Pressure Control to continue providing those same services Jan. 25.

Kansas Gas Service has asked Cudd, which sent an Oklahoma crew to Hutchinson, to reissue the city's bill to the gas company.

Wheat crops damaged by harsh winter weather

WICHITA — Freezing temperatures and wind have taken their toll on the Kansas wheat crop this winter.

Kansas Agricultural Statistics Service reported Monday that 5 percent of the wheat was in excellent condition, with another 35 percent in good shape. About 32 percent got a fair rating.

KASS said 28 percent of the crop was in poor shape or very poor condition.

About 74 percent of the crop has received light to no damage from the wind and 71 percent got light to no freeze damage, the agency said.

Temperatures for February ranged from highs of 67 degrees in Parsons to 45 degrees at Ottawa. Lows ranged from 9 degrees at Parsons to minus 16 at Scandia in north-central Kansas.

Feed supplies are holding up for livestock producers.

Arts, Sciences sets Telefund donation record

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
Kansas State Collegian

The College of Arts and Sciences raised more than $300,000 at this year's KSU Foundation Telefund, setting a record for the amount a single college has reached.

"We're very excited, very pleased," said Shirley Olson, assistant to the dean and Telefund administrator for the college. "The coaches and the student volunteers made it happen."

Gordon Dowell, Telefund director, said the closest a college ever came to that amount was when the College of Engineering raised $285,000 last year.

He said the key to this year's success for the College of Arts and Sciences was the participation.

"Every phone was taken every night, which allowed an unprecedented number of alumni to express support for the university," he said.

Last year's total for the college was $261,000.

John Golbuff, junior in public relations, was a caller on the last night when the total was announced. He said the idea among everyone that night was to beat the College of Engineering. Golbuff, himself, raised more than $2,000 in two nights.

"Everyone started screaming really loud when the board showed that we had raised over $300,000," he said. "It was exciting."

Jonathan Mitchell, sophomore in public relations, volunteered four nights at Telefund 2001, bringing in around $3,500.

"It was awesome — there was a lot of energy in that room," he said.

"We're helping the university and having fun at the same time."

About 90 percent of the money raised by the volunteers will be spent on student scholarships, with some going to faculty awards and equipment for the college.

As of Tuesday, the grand total from the fund raiser has exceeded $1.15 million.

Dowell said six colleges have completed calling for this year's Telefund, and all six have set new pledge records.

Olson said the amount raised could be attributed to alumni support and enthusiasm.

"I think K-State alumni are loyal to this institution and do appreciate talking with other students," she said.

Ali Karimi and Fidel Amos have voices to be heard.

Karimi and Amos are candidates for student body president and vice president, and both said they are excited about the issues they want to address to students.

"These issues are all things that have been swept under the table, and they're not going away," said Karimi, presidential candidate and junior in television and radio.

"They all can be achieved in one year — there's no doubt about it."

The first issue they want to address is classroom updates and comfort. Karimi and Amos, vice-presidential candidate, would like to have clocks placed in every classroom, and they support a comfortable work or study environment. That means increasing the air flow by either placing fans in every room or updating the heating and cooling systems. Karimi said the atmosphere is like "Goldilocks and The Three Bears" — too hot or too cold.

Also falling under this category is putting higher quality toilet paper in restrooms.

"It doesn't make any sense to me why we can have a contract with Pepsi, but we cannot have a contract with Charmin," Karimi said.

Parking is their second issue. Karimi and Amos said there is no one solution to fighting the chaos. Both said they support having the meters checked on a regular basis and putting a time frame on the amount of tickets that can be issued for the same violation.

Utilizing the university's two television stations is also on the agenda.

Karimi and Amos said they would like to see more sporting events, speeches and even the Student Governing Association debates televised.

The team said they support the idea of having a student concert every year.

This concert would be during the spring semester. It would include bands, vendors and bounties Ali Karimi and Fidel Amos, candidates for Student Governing Association president and vice president, are serious about the issues they want to address to students. The first issue they want to address is classroom updates and comfort. They would like to have clocks placed in every room, and they support a comfortable work or study environment. Supporting a comfortable work environment includes putting higher quality toilet paper in restrooms. Karimi and Amos' slogan is Viva La Resistencia, fighting the strongest forces to support the weakest.

Budget cuts to affect quality of education

K-State's budget has gone under the knife recently, and there is no doubt students and faculty are the ones who will be cut.

One third of the massive budget cuts by Gov. Bill Graves will come from K-State. That is equivalent to $2.1 million of the $6.1 million cut.

The cuts will cause a domino effect. They will affect the amount of professors and classes.

K-State already has experienced financial difficulties: the temporary professor hiring freeze already is in place. This, in turn, can affect the quality of programs.

It is time for students and faculty to voice opinions. Write, e-mail or call elected officials of our state. Tell them education budgets should be the last thing cut.

GETTING BY WITH A LITTLE HELP FROM YOUR
F.R.I.E.N.D.S

College friends more meaningful than those in high school

When I was younger, I remember hearing someone say "good friends are hard to find." I never really paid any attention to the remark because, at the time, I thought it was a bunch of baloney.

I was the sort of kid who used to go up to someone on the playground and ask him or her to be my friend. It was as simple as that. It didn't make any sense to me that a good friend could be hard to find when there were so many playgrounds out there.

As I got older, I began to think a true friendship might be a little more elusive than I originally had believed. In middle school, there were those people who said they were our friends because we were popular, pretty, smart or funny. We invited them to our birthday parties and sometimes we went to the movies together but we never really shared anything real with them. They merely were acquaintances. They were friends for show.

Then high school rolled around, and I realized which people were my true friends. In the big world of high school, those people whom I considered to be my friends in middle school went their separate ways and made new acquaintances.

In high school, I soon found a close group of friends with whom I felt I could share my dreams, fears and hopes for the future. We passed notes during class and cruised around town together during the summer. We spent countless hours agonizing over our crushes and our outfits for the weekend.

Now that I'm in college I look back on those friendships and smile. Those times were much more innocent and carefree. We didn't have to worry about being on our own. The real world wasn't speeding toward us like it is now. The most important decisions we had to make were what to do on the weekends or whether we were going to the football game.

The friendships I have now mean so much more to me. My college friends have been there for it all. They've been there when I had my heart broken. They've assured the sun will still come up tomorrow even though I did bad on my College Algebra tests. They've celebrated with me as I've begun achieve my goals. I think the friends I have now are my "true friends." A true friend fills so many roles in our lives. They support us, comfort us and give us hope when times are tough.

They love us even when we make bad decisions. They push us to realize our full potential. True friends understand our shortcomings and accept us for who we are. They don't blame us for who we aren't.

I'm lucky to have so many people in my life whom I can consider my true friends. I can certainly be a lot to put up with at times but they've been there through the thick and the thin. I thank God every day for having blessed me by bringing these wonderful people into my life.

We often take our friends for granted. We forget to tell them thanks for being there. We very rarely tell them we love them when we're sober. We just assume they know how we feel.

It brightens everyone's day to know they are wanted. Let your friends know you care about them. You can just say thank you. You can give them a hug or write them a letter. Give them a card. Buy them something silly that will make them think of you every time they see it. Or you can write a column in the Collegian and say thanks to all of your friends for just being themselves and being your friends.

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics relevant to the publication.

Where can I meet one of these cowboys?

Joe Leonard, do you really need a handicapped parking permit for a broken foot?

We watched the KSU football players play basketball the other day. Too bad they couldn't tackle that well during the Oklahoma game.

How can the Bugle Boy store be closing if we didn't even know it existed?

I just wondered why I even got out of bed Monday morning because Keira Mann's column wasn't in the Collegian.

It's not that I already don't pay K-State enough money the way it is, but they are going to charge me $15 to leave now, too. Thanks, K-State.

Does everybody like Steely Dan since the Grammys or is it just my roommate?

I pay a $300 privilege fee and I still have to pay $2 to do something at Ahearn. Thanks, K-State.

To the Collegian: the men's basketball team is ranked 11th in the conference; the women are ranked 12th. And, it looks like the men's track team placed 4th in conference and the women placed 3rd, so why don't you give them their props?

This is in response to Dana Pracht's comment in the Monday Collegian that the new turf in Memorial Stadium won't scratch like grass. Two words: have you ever heard of turf burn? It's a little more painful than anything grass can do. Ask any of the football players.

It's a good thing with these budget cuts that we are using our money wisely. Like putting astro turf in Memorial Stadium.

What is snow called? In Manhattan, it is called pothole camouflage.

Question for Thursday: How well do you think you have been prepared for graduation?

Candidates offer 10 points to improve campus

VIVA LA RESISTANCE
The Ali Karimi and Fidel Amos campus plan bases itself on 10 points (yes, that's right, 10 points). All of which can be completed in one year. Unlike the sloth governments of the past, it's time to actually get something done that real students can see.

1. Classroom updates and comfort. It's time to update our buildings. Every room should have a clock. I think we are owed the right to know what time it is. Every room should have some sort of airflow. It's not 1960: I think we can have functioning A/C. Rooms should be comfortable, not way too hot or way too cold — this isn't "Goldilocks and the Three Bears," I'm sure we can have it just right. I think it's about time we actually got some toilet paper people can use. It's not like I'm Finch from "American Pie," but come on. If we can have a contract with Pepsi Cola, why can't we have one with Charmin? Union water cups are too small. If you don't like Pepsi products, you have no other choice but to drink water. These cups are made for mouthwash, not water.

2. Parking ticket reform. Meters should be checked routinely for malfunctions. The problems should not be up to us to report. The way it works now, there is no time frame for the amount of tickets you can get. So, when you're in class you could come back to a wheel-lock. You shouldn't be able to get more than one ticket every 50 minutes. It's not like you can leave class to put money in the meter.

ALI KARIMI

3. Television. There are two TV stations on campus, and they are not being used. Television is a great tool. It's time to use the resources we have. KSDB-FM

91.9 is student-run, and it runs great. It's time to turn over the TV station to the students.

4. Student concerts. Many universities have concerts for their students as a way of giving something back. Even our rival University of Kansas has "Day on the Hill." There are small concerts for hip-hop and rock. We would like to get together and make a big campuswide concert, for free, for every student to enjoy.

5. Campaign finance. The money spent on this election is ridiculous. It should be capped at $1,000. A candidate for student government should not be spending well over $3,000 on an election when a lot of us are having ramen for dinner.

6. KATS. Enrollment should be free. The pork-barrel charge needs to go. Not only would it help promote KATS, but it also would help people become more familiar with how it works.

7. Traffic light. The traffic light at Denison Avenue and Claflin Road needs to be changed. Trying to make a left turn there in the middle of the day is like "The Crying Game."

8. Roads. The potholes on campus roads could have their own Zip codes.

9. City commission. If elected, we will attend every city commission meeting. I think the students need to have a voice in town. If we don't stand up for ourselves, who will?

10. Napster. The university should not ban this service. We pay for the Internet, we should be allowed to use it.

We are the only candidates who are going to address these issues. When it comes your time to vote, look beyond the hype. VIVA LA RESISTANCE.

Burgess loses in primary election

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

Today begins a whole new race for six Manhattan City Commission candidates, but candidate Art Burgess will not be joining them.

Burgess, obtaining 5.84 percent of the total vote, came in seventh place for the primary election that ended Monday night. Ironically, Burgess was the reason the primary was conducted. As the seventh candidate to file in late January, election rules stated that the primary was required to narrow the field down to six.

Burgess could not be reached for comment.

A total of 2,926 votes were collected for the primary, 12 percent of registered voters, Riley County Clerk Rich Vargo said.

"That's low because of the weather," Vargo said, referring to snow drifts on election day.

Despite several inches of snow, results were in and counted from 27 polls citywide before 9 p.m. Monday. Though extra votes, from voters whose registration information has changed, still need to be counted, Vargo said results are not likely to change.

Newcomers Mark Taussig and Brad Everett came in first and second places, respectively, followed by incumbent Roger Reitz in third place.

David Johnson, another new candidate, took fourth place. Sitting commissioners Karen McCulloh and Carol Peak placed fifth and sixth, respectively.

The next step, Vargo said, is the April 3 primary election, when three final candidates will emerge, the two highest with four-year terms and the third with a two-year term.

Of those remaining, a divide seems present between incumbents and new candidates. Almost all agree membership will change by mid-April.

Taussig said coming in first was a pleasant surprise, but it suggests a local dissatisfaction with the current commission.

"I think they're looking for new leadership in the community," he said.

Taussig, who said his platform is based on public safety, reduced spending and listening, said the race isn't over yet.

"I'm looking at it like the race has just begun, and we're going to take it up a notch," he said.

Everett said he also was pleased to make second place and intends to double his pace from here on.

"In four weeks, a lot of things can happen," he said. "I'm not taking anything for granted."

Everett, who said he wants to focus on fiscal restraint and controlled city growth, agreed the votes suggest a wish for change.

"I think the voters are wanting to go and redirect the commission,"

Primary Statistics

Election rules state that when there are more than six candidates for Manhattan City Commission, a primary must be conducted. Voters were asked to vote for three of the seven names on the ballot. Art Burgess was eliminated from the race Tuesday when he received the least number of votes.

Total voters: 2,926

Name	Votes	Percent
Mark Taussig	1,750	22.09
Brad Everett	1,521	19.20
Roger P. Reitz	1,357	17.13
David L. Johnson	1,188	15
Karen McCulloh	829	10.46
Carol Peak	814	10.28
Art Burgess	463	5.84

he said.

Reitz, sandwiched between new candidates, said at least one new commissioner definitely will make it in April. How many, he said, is difficult to predict.

If third — Reitz's spot — and fourth place switch during the April election, Reitz said Manhattan could have a very new governing body, with three new members and two veteran commissioners.

"If this holds, a lot of experience is lost from the commission," he said.

Johnson, in fourth, said the results met his expectations.

"Actually, they were encouraging because I was a relative unknown," he said. "I was starting from square one a couple of weeks ago."

Though Taussig and Everett are new candidates, he said, they have had name recognition for some time. Now that he has his name out, Johnson said things could continue to look up.

"I think we have a good chance of finishing towards the top," he said.

Johnson said he plans to campaign on commission support for affordable housing, reduced costs of living and more local jobs for K-State graduates.

Mayor Karen McCulloh said Monday's voting numbers certainly cannot be looked at as a pat on the head for the current commission.

However, she said she plans to spend more time on her campaign and to look at the issues.

Tax cuts have been mentioned repeatedly, she said, but little reference has been made to what services will be cut.

Without cutting services, tax cuts usually are an empty promise, she said.

"My campaign will probably be asking some very hard questions," she said.

Carol Peak could not be reached for comment.

Advance voting for the general April 3 election will begin 20 days earlier on March 14 before polls open across the city, Vargo said.

House defeats bill for research center

By SHANNON MARSHALL
Kansas State Collegian

Although confusion in the House of Representatives defeated a bill Friday for an agricultural research center at K-State, support from Gov. Bill Graves likely will push the center closer to completion.

The bill proposed the creation of a value-added research center at K-State that would benefit students as well as the state's agricultural community.

Sue Peterson, director of governmental relations and assistant to President Jon Wefald, lobbied the bill to the Legislature last week. She said the money to support the project would not come from the state's general fund, but a $3 million Educational Building Fund.

"I understand that there was confusion in the House," Peterson said. "They thought they were spending money that they thought might be funded by the state's general fund, which is kind of like the state's checking account. With the tight budget right now, they were hesitant to do that."

Graves recommended the bill to be included in the capitol improvement bill, which incorporates all of the governor's recommendations to the Senate on capitol improvements for all state agencies.

The Educational Building Fund that would support the research center is used to support construction and maintenance at the six state universities. K-State's Fiedler and Ackert halls have also received monetary support from the fund.

Marc Johnson, dean of the College of Agriculture, said the plan for the center is a result of the governor's 21st Century Vision Task Force. The task force, which met last summer, consisted of seven committees that represented different sectors of the Kansas population, including agriculture.

"The agricultural research center was No. 1 on the list for the agriculture committee," Johnson said. "The goal was to enhance science and technology for value-added agriculture in Kansas."

Peterson and Wefald will travel to Topeka today to appear before the House Education Budget Committee, where they will continue to discuss the research center. Peterson said the university will continue to support the proposal for the research center.

"It's really a center for everyone in the state to benefit from," she said. "We'll keep working in the process until the Legislature adjourns."

Women's basketball to face Baylor today

By DAN SMITH
Kansas State Collegian

Although Big 12 tournament action starts next week with first round games Tuesday, head coach Deb Patterson said the K-State women's team isn't looking past tonight's game against Baylor at 7.

"Baylor is important to this ball club because every game is important," she said. "Every opportunity we have is just another chance to get better."

K-State will look to end the regular season on a positive note in Waco, Texas against the No. 24 Bears. The Cats (12-14, 2-13) enter tonight's contest with only one win in their last nine games, and Baylor (19-7, 8-7) is 6-4 in its last 10 games.

Baylor's charge will be led by Big 12 rookie of the week Sheila Lambert. The 6-foot-4 junior guard earned the honor Monday after posting consecutive 20-plus point games against Oklahoma and Nebraska last week. Lambert also had 11 assists and nine steals against the Sooners and Huskers.

Tonight's game represents more than just another chance to get better, though. K-State will be fighting for position in next week's tournament, Patterson said.

"It will probably affect our seeding in the Big 12 tournament, so there's still a lot to play for," she said. "There's a very strong possibility that we may play Baylor two games in a row."

That situation would play out if one of two things happens. If either the Cats pull out an upset against Baylor or Texas A&M loses to KU, K-State will lock up the No. 11 seed in Kansas City next week to lock up a rematch against the Bears.

Still, not too many players are worried about the tournament yet, senior guard Morgen Finneran said.

"Our main focus right now is to get a good win against Baylor," she said. "We need to string together 40 minutes of good basketball and then carry that over to the tournament and use that to build confidence and momentum."

Momentum has been elusive in Big 12 play for the Cats to this point, especially on the road where K-State has yet to win in conference play. Baylor is 11-2 at the Ferrell Center this season, but senior forward Marshela Webb said this season is far from over.

"Nobody is looking at this season as if it is over," she said. "We're hoping that we still have a few more games to play."

Men's golf places 8th at San Antonio Invitational

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

Freshman golfer A.J. Elgert chalked up his third career top-20 finish Tuesday to lead the K-State men's golf team to eighth place at the Texas-San Antonio Invitational Tuesday afternoon.

The 12-team tournament was placed at the Oak Hills Country Club and featured six teams ranked in the Golfweek/Sagarin Performance Index Top 100.

Elgert began the day in 23rd place, and used a final-round 72 to jump up to 17th place, which tied for the highest finish in his career. Elgert's three-round 218 was the lowest score of his career.

Especially impressive for Elgert was his first-round even par 71.

"A.J. really made it look easy that first round. I thought it was a good tournament for A.J. overall," head coach Tim Norris said. "He got to play with one of the top-10 players in the country in Craig Lie from Arkansas, and he handled it well. It was just what he needed."

Elgert's play also was just what the Cats needed. His final round, combined with junior Matt Williams' 73 helped push K-State past Illinois State, which was tied with the Cats to start the day.

If K-State is to improve, though, it must rely on more than two players, Norris said.

"I am happy with how we played overall, but now we need one more player to step up," he said. "There are positives to pull away from how we played, but it's a mental game now. It's all about getting out of your own way when you play. So, if we can get over that hump and get another player going, we will be all right."

Texas Tech shot a final-round 281 to win the tournament and outpaced second-place Texas-San Antonio by eight shots.

K-State now is off until after spring break, resuming action March 26-27 at the Stevinson Ranch Invitational in Stevinson, Calif.

State showdown

Men's basketball team faces Kansas for 2nd time this season; looks to overcome 17 consecutive losses in Manhattan

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

Feb. 28 typically is a little late to be wrapping up the annual Sunflower Showdown series.

In fact, tonight's game marks the latest the Wildcats and Jayhawks have met in a season since the 1981-82 campaign. And, although K-State has dropped 20 straight to Kansas, including 17 consecutive in Manhattan, at least the purple might have that bit of history on their side.

If it intends to repeat itself. On March 2, 1982, No. 17 K-State downed KU, 74-52, at Ahearn Field House.

Nearly two decades later, though, the tables have taken a drastic turn as No. 10 Kansas (21-5, 10-4) takes on K-State (9-16, 3-11) at 8:07 tonight in Bramlage Coliseum. Now, it's the Hawks who consistently rank amid the nation's top squads, while the Cats struggle to compete with their intrastate rivals.

Kansas has won the last three games in Manhattan by an average of 22.3 points, and earlier this season on Jan. 27, KU jumped on K-State early and claimed a 92-66 win.

Much of that game's outcome can be attributed to the Hawks' transition game, head coach Jim Woodriddle said, as Kansas' ability to push the ball down the floor created too many fast-break points.

"You have no chance if you don't get back down the floor," Woodriddle said. "They've got an awfully good team and they put a lot of pressure on your defense early, so you've got to get back down the floor and protect your basket."

K-State will be protecting that basket from a potent KU offense that boasts six double-figure scorers.

Nick Collison especially has been on track as of late, as the forward has averaged 24 points in his last two outings, while guard Kirk Hinrich has posted 17.5 points and 9.5 assists during that stretch.

Nevertheless, Woodriddle said keeping the Hawks out of the middle will be a key in tonight's matchup.

"They've got a lot of weapons, and you've got to guard all over the floor," he said, "but if you don't guard that paint, you're not going to win a game against Kansas."

Conversely, the Hawks are faced with the task of shutting down the Cats' leading scorer, Phineas Atchison (12.2 ppg), who exploded for 28 points off the bench on 10 of 19 shooting in the two teams' earlier meetings.

"I just think that was a moment. I think that just happened," Atchison said. "It was fun doing it, but that came from other teammates getting me wide open shots — I just happened to be hitting a lot of shots."

Since that game, though, K-State has lost seven of its past eight games, including a 52-47 loss at Oklahoma State on Saturday.

Atchison's leaning jumper, which would have given K-State the lead with 12 seconds left, didn't fall. Yet, as has been evident in most games, the effort was there against the Cowboys, Woodriddle said.

"Our team competed extremely well and extremely hard in the game. We've been in these situations before," he said. "But what I told our kids — You're not going to have an opportunity to win games like that if you don't do what you did effortwise."

"We came up short on some shots down the stretch, but again, we were pleased with so many of our kids in the game."

Meanwhile, Kansas is coming off a 78-74 victory at Nebraska on Sunday, just the team's third win in the past six games.

Tonight's contest marks the last home game for two Wildcat seniors — Kelvin Howell and Joe Leonard, who will be honored in a ceremony prior to the game.

Howell said his emotion will be apparent as he steps onto the Bramlage Coliseum floor for one final time.

"Play hard. Get ready," he said. "I've been getting ready ever since I woke up this morning. The last game should be your most enthusiastic game."

Yet, Woodriddle said K-State will need more than Howell to step up against the Jayhawks.

"Everybody that plays in this game is going to have a big role because of the level of play Kansas brings to each game — the depth they bring," Woodriddle said. "So, not only Kelvin Howell, but we've got seven, eight guys — perhaps nine guys — that are going to play in the game and have to play at a very high level."

One such player is point guard Larry Reid. Woodriddle said that despite the junior's scoring in double figures in six of his past eight games, he's not playing his best basketball — and the Cats need that push.

"He's shut himself down, but like I told him, you never know when you're going to play your best game," Woodriddle said. "Find some confidence in yourself and understand that confidence can only be found within yourself."

"We have confidence in him as coaches, and I think he knows that. So we'll see better basketball out of Larry as we go on."

That kind of basketball is dependent on K-State's success as well, Woodriddle said.

"He's one of the guys on our team that has the ability to create shots and create shots for other players, so if he's playing well — scoring the ball and/or setting other people up — then our team functions better."

"Simple as that. He has to play well for our team to win. He's one of the players that is in that category."

Boston's Fenway Park closing causes loss of historic value, pride in Red Sox

Sometimes you have to wonder about us baseball fans.

We're supposed to be some of the most loyal folks in the country, yet some of us turn our backs when our support is needed.

As baseball prepares to open another chapter this season, we are readying to close another. One of baseball's greatest icons will soon be gone, and it's a shame.

He's never won a batting title or competed for a Cy Young award. He's never hit a homer with a full count in the bottom of the ninth to save the game, and he's never come on in relief to spoil a late-inning rally.

What he has managed to do is provide us with 89 years worth of memories and stories, and still, even some of baseball's so-called "purists" are against the idea of saving him.

"He" is Boston's Fenway Park, and he soon will be going where Ebbets Field, the Polo Grounds, Tiger Stadium, Candlestick Park and many other historic stadiums already are.

"Our vision for a new ballpark is to take all that is great and wonderful about the current ballpark and improve upon it," a propaganda-ish statement on www.redsox.com reads.

Are you kidding me?

"All that is great and wonderful" about Fenway Park is not Red Sox CEO John Harrington's to take and do with as he pleases. Neither is it general manager Dan Duquette's, nor is it Massachusetts Gov. Paul Celluci's.

It belongs to Cy Young, Babe Ruth, Tris Speaker, Ted Williams, Jimmie Fox, Jim Rice, Carl Yastrzemski, Carlton Fisk and, most of all, it belongs to the generations of sports fans whose love is for the Boston Red Sox. Baseball, as a whole, is rooted in a baseball stadium that is far more important than the bottom line.

Fenway Park is baseball, just like Yankee Stadium and Wrigley Field. Although many of us have never been to a game at the stadium that sits as a monument to the greatness of the sport, few could argue that "The Fen" doesn't evoke a sense of magic and humility in even the casual baseball fan.

"I came to love Fenway. It was a place that rejuvenated me after a road trip. The fans right on top of you, the nutty angles," Hall of Famer Yastrzemski said. "And the Wall. That was my baby, the left-field wall, the Green Monster."

Hall of Fame pitcher Tom Seaver called it "the essence of baseball," and for countless numbers of fans, Fenway Park has been more than just another baseball venue since its christening April 20, 1912.

environment," is absurd.

My apologies to some of today's modern mall/restaurant/marina/amusement park/and, oh yeah ... baseball stadiums, but to me, the baseball park is second only to church in its aura.

Not those newfangled ones, either.

What I want is, a) real grass, b) no domes, c) manual scoreboards, d) the green monster, e) bleachers, f) coziness and, most of all, the feeling that this three hours of my life is well spent because I am paying homage to a valuable part of this sport's history.

Shame on you, Boston, not only for hurting your own fans, but also for eliminating one of only a few baseball paradises.

Lafene Barbie to teach about eating disorders

By KRISTEN DYMAK
Kansas State Collegian

There's Malibu Barbie, Bedtime Baby Barbie, Rain or Sun Barbie and Dream Wedding Barbie.

This week there's a new Barbie to add to the list — Lafene Health Center Barbie.

That's not her official name, but as part of National Eating Disorders Awareness and Prevention Week, a life-sized cardboard cutout Barbie, along with her life-sized boyfriend, Ken, will be at the eating disorders awareness table in the K-State Student Union today and Friday.

Dianna Schalles, Lafene Health Education and Promotions dietitian, said the Barbie and Ken figures are to help raise awareness about eating disorders.

"They are supposed to represent the cultural idea of what we are supposed to look like according to the media and society," Schalles said. "We are here to say just how unrealistic it is."

As part of the awareness and prevention week, Health Education and Promotions at Lafene, the Union Program Council, the Student Dietetic Association and University Counseling Services are sponsoring weeklong activities.

The awareness table, which will be set up from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today and 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Friday in the Union, has fliers and informative papers with facts and statistics about eating disorders.

The four groups also are sponsoring a speaker and panel at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Union Ballroom.

Schalles said Thursday's speaker, Roni Schwartz, who works for the Eating Disorders Program of Kansas City and Baptist Medical Center, will be addressing the differences between body image issues and clinical eating disorders.

"She'll talk about eating disorder recovery and what she does to help her patients," she said.

After Schwartz's presentation, Schalles said there will be a panel to answer questions.

The panel will include students recovering from eating disorders, Lafene physician Larry Moeller and University Counseling Services therapist Dorothy Farrand.

Lafene student intern Kendra Spaeth said eating disorder awareness is important, especially for college students, because of the increase in cases.

"It's a big problem among this age group for both males and females. It's really growing," said Spaeth, senior in public health nutrition.

Often, she said, people look at models and actresses as having the ideal body image.

But Spaeth said those models and actresses usually weigh less than what is healthy.

"One important thing our society forgets about, with the focus on obesity and the war on fat, is that it forgets that being underweight is unhealthy," she said. "These super-thin models and actresses are just as unhealthy as overweight individuals."

Student volunteer Kendra Glassman said many people don't voice a concern about eating disorders.

"No one really talks about eating disorders," Glassman, junior in dietetics, said. "No one takes it as seriously as a mental illness."

Schalles said that's why this week's activities were important for everyone.

"There is a stigma with eating disorders and people are afraid to come forward," she said.

"We really want to zero in on our speaker and the resources that are available at Lafene. We want people to know that help is available," she said.

Candidates to voice ideas, platforms on KSDB-FM 91.9 talk shows twice this week

By SHANNON BURKDOLL
Kansas State Collegian

Voters can get to know the student body presidential candidates more personally by tuning their radios to KSDB-FM 91.9 at 5:45 p.m. tonight and 6:30 p.m. Thursday night.

Phil Green and Dan Neises will be host to a radio talk show that will allow listeners to get to know the scoop on each presidential candidate, such as their favorite things, including food, color and pet peeves.

The hosts plan to ask nontraditional questions to liven up the show and allow the candidates to be themselves.

"We will talk to them as normal people," Green, senior in political science, said. "We'll treat them as we would other radio guests."

The candidates will have 30 minutes to answer questions presented by the show hosts and callers. The questions are divided into three rounds of ten minutes.

The first round will be based on the candidates' favorites and basic get-to-know-you types of questions, and the second round will be based on callers' questions, Green said.

The third round will be more serious, and will be about their issues and platforms, he said.

"The key to our show is that we never script it out," Green said. "We kinda make it up as we go — it's off the top of our heads."

The candidates basically chose what night and time would work best for them, Green said.

Rick Wooten and Aaron Shea will start the presentation at 5:45 p.m., and Ben Hopper and Eric Engel will go on-air at 6:15 p.m. Thursday night, Travis Lenkner and Mary Bosco will begin at 6:30 p.m., Ali Karimi and Fidel Amos will be on at 7 p.m. and Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman will be on at 7:30 p.m.

"We always wanted to do a radio show with the candidates because you never feel like you know who they are. People vote without ever hearing them speak in person," Neises, senior in microbiology, said. "It will be a good opportunity for students to find out what kind of people they are rather than what issues they have."

Green and Neises said they want their show to get to the core of the candidates — not just their issues.

"It will kinda be like Oprah," Neises said, "but we won't ask them to remember their spirit afterwards."

Taxes on tobacco, alcohol might rise

By JOHN MILBURN
The Associated Press

TOPEKA — An Emporia senator took on two lobbyist groups Tuesday in advocating higher taxes on alcohol and cigarettes to increase funding for public education and state universities.

The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee heard testimony on proposals from Sen. Jim Barnett, R-Emporia, to raise the tax on alcohol by 50 cents on a six-pack of beer, 21 cents on a bottle of wine and 31 cents for a bottle of bourbon and other hard liquor.

The plan would raise $61 million in its first year, which would increase base state aid to public schools by $155 per pupil — $105 above the $50 increase proposed by Gov. Bill Graves. That would raise the base aid to school districts from $3,820 to $3,925.

"This is a fair tax," Barnett said, "and one that will save Kansas taxpayers in the long run."

Barnett's tobacco tax proposal would increase the cost of a package of cigarettes by a dime per pack and $1 per carton. The tax would raise approximately $23 million, to be divided among the regents, Department of Corrections, Kansas Highway Patrol and groups that provide help to the developmentally disabled.

Lobbyists for the liquor, tobacco, restaurant and convenience store associations voiced strong opposition to the bills.

They argued the taxes would be regressive, putting more burden on low-income Kansans and on an industry that already is taxed at each level of distribution.

Sen. David Corbin, R-Towanda and committee chairman, was uncertain whether the bills would be put to a vote.

Corbin said there are concerns about the impact of the taxes on businesses along state lines that may lose customers to Missouri.

City discusses water issues

■ Commission examines future of water supply with help of outside firm.

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

The city of Manhattan is examining its options on water carefully.

The Manhattan City Commission heard about the future of the city's water from an outside consulting firm it brought in for Tuesday's meeting.

The commissioned group, CH2M Hill, is looking at ways to reuse waste water and to help the city meet its future water capacity needs.

The presentation ranged from cost to consumers for expanding the water treatment plant on the west side of Manhattan, to options on cost effectiveness and conservation.

A concern expressed was what the costs of water improvements would mean to consumers.

Commissioner Roger Reitz said he would like to see the figures that were given to the commission and city officials broken down so they could see exactly how they would affect consumers.

"I would like to see a few bills that show the potential that an average person in a bungalow pays, along with a person who might use a little bit more from watering their grass every night in the summer," Reitz said.

"What that means is, we have had a good situation with our water for a long time."

Commissioner Ed Klimek said the increases consumers would pay likely would be noticed more in times of distress than in times of prosperity.

In the presentation, CH2M Hill explained the future expansions would account for the long-term water needs of Manhattan. Commissioners asked if the time table given could be pushed back if there were a way to conserve water, thus saving dollars in the operating budget.

The city will hear from the panel again May 22.

In other action, the commission agreed to place on a future agenda the issue of whether to become involved in the Kansas Corporation Commission rate case.

The case, which originated in Topeka, occurred because the city filed suit to protect its customers against potential rate increases. In documents filed by Western Resources, it was stated the rate increase for the KPL service area would be in the range from 19 to 20 percent.

Diane Stoddard, assistant city manager, said different high energy users, like the K-State campus, have been notified, and the commission will listen to further information on the rate increase at a later date.

Mardi Gras parties draw thousands to New Orleans

By DOUG SIMPSON
The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS, La. — Jazz clarinetist Pete Fountain and actor John Goodman led a morning march down St. Charles Avenue on Tuesday as thousands of tourists poured into New Orleans to celebrate the Big Easy's biggest party — Mardi Gras.

"There are two things I can get up for this early: going fishing and this," Fountain said at 7 a.m. while leading his "Half-Fast Marching Club" on its 40th annual Fat Tuesday trek.

Fountain was resplendent in a black and gold jester's outfit. Goodman, a part-time New Orleans resident, rode on a small float pulled by a truck.

Mardi Gras is the raucous climax of New Orleans' Carnival season, which begins each year Jan. 6 and officially ends at 12:01 a.m. Ash Wednesday. The tradition goes back more than a century.

More than a million tourists and locals were expected to jam the city's streets during the final four to five days. By mid-morning, the narrow streets of the historic French Quarter were filling with revelers, many of them drinking heavily, some elaborately costumed.

The New Orleans celebration goes off largely trouble free. In Seattle and in Austin, Texas, this year a Mardi Gras parade was canceled and a curfew imposed after weekend rioters tossed bottles and smashed store windows.

"The police officers are letting everybody have a good time," Lance Smith of Las Vegas said Monday, while sipping a beer on Bourbon Street.

Local community leaders served as Carnival royalty in Tuesday's parades, which drew thousands.

But, for many tourists, the real draw is the libidinous, alcohol-fueled atmosphere.

Crowds gathered under balconies, begging the occupants to toss down the season's traditional prize — strands of cheap plastic beads.

In a bawdy tradition, many women in the French Quarter flashed their breasts in return for beads. Others simply took their tops off for good.

"I did lots of sassy things," said Sarah Cravillan a waitress from Green Bay, Wis. "I got lots of beads. I only showed my chest twice."

Such public displays create a dilemma for New Orleans police, who must decide when enough is enough. Last year, a crackdown on women flashing their breasts for beads drew criticism from revelers, who said it was harmless fun.

This year, the department announced officers will make arrests only when nudity or lewdness are considered a threat to public safety.

"If you have a level head and behave yourself, you can go out and have a good time here and not get hassled," Smith said. "It's been great."

Prairie's effect on climate researched

By SEAN PURCELL
Kansas State Collegian

Research by a K-State professor and a graduate student shows that the diminishing original tallgrass prairie in the United States is capable of helping predict climate changes.

The masterminds behind gathering and interpreting the data, which led to the eventual publication in Science magazine, were co-authors Alan Knapp, professor of biology, and Melinda Smith, graduate student in biology.

The data compiled by Knapp and Smith came from 11 different long-term ecological sites across North America.

The research and conclusions gathered from those Internet sites was reflective of data that was recorded as far back as the early 1960s.

"In this study, we were particularly interested in how different ecosystems responded to variations in rainfall," Knapp said. "If rainfall patterns change and variability changes in the future — as predicted by climate models — how will that affect plant growth, and which ecosystems will be the most responsive?"

Two years ago, Knapp called upon Smith to work side-by-side with him in fine-tuning the project, by getting it published. Smith, who had Knapp as an adviser, said her role in the project was to gather the data from the 11 North American sites, develop graphs of the data and then help with the actual writing of the paper.

"This was an opportunity I was excited to take part in, and it was good to see the finished product when it came out," Smith said.

After publication in the Jan. 19 issue of Science, Smith said they received many phone calls about their work. One in particular was the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Nashville, Tenn.

Their interest was in taking the research to the next level by constructing visual models of the research. Smith said she was excited to see their research go to the next step because that was one of their goals from the beginning.

Smith said that although some of the research might be hard to understand, K-State students definitely can benefit from looking at the data.

"I think it can give people a better appreciation of the area that they live in," Smith said.

Knapp said he agreed and said this study is important to students because it aids in understanding the value the ecosystem has in detecting different climates.

Plumber not bothered by stereotypes

By KECIA N. SEYB
Kansas State Collegian

Plumbers might be the butt of jokes, but Tim Nelson said that the stereotypes have no merit and that his trade deserves some respect.

Nelson, a plumber at Maximum Comfort Services in Manhattan, has been plumbing for more than 20 years and said he has enjoyed it since day one.

"I've always liked plumbing. I've always liked doing construction. It's kind of nice to do something and see the final product. It's a needed necessity. It's the one thing in life that's never put off — the plumber," Nelson said.

Nelson was born and raised in Manhattan. After high school, he went through a four-year apprenticeship program, working during the day and going to school at night. Still, he continues to educate himself in his trade.

"The job's always changing — you're always going to take something. I've taken more courses in weird stuff than you can shake a stick at," he said.

Nelson has worked at Maximum Comfort Services since May 2000. Before that, he worked for other companies, including some construction companies, and he also taught plumbing at Job Corps.

From teaching, Nelson discovered many people have false assumptions about plumbers and their trade.

"I taught for eight and a half years, and students constantly came in and the one thing they always thought was, 'That's what plumbers do. They work on toilets.'"

"A plumber really does three things: drain waste and vents, water lines and gas lines," Nelson said.

Nelson said a plumber is someone who provides the safe delivery of potable water — the water a person is not afraid to drink — and the safe disposal of non-potable water — the water a person would not want to drink.

Nelson said, as a plumber, he deals with life and death every day.

"If a plumber goes up, and say you had cross contamination between a sewer and domestic water, it could make you deathly sick. If people don't put Tim Nelson is a plumber at Maximum Comfort Services in Manhattan, he has been plumbing for more than 20 years and says he has enjoyed it since the day he started.

things together right, they can explode, and when they do, it can be big," he said.

Nelson's wife, Deborah, veterinarian and owner of Blue Hills Animal Hospital, said she realizes the dangers involved with her husband's job.

"It's something you have to have a very analytical mind for," she said. "You have to have certification. If you don't know what you're doing, it literally can mean your life."

Nelson said there are so many facets to his job people don't realize, but he said he enjoys having a physical job.

"A lot of people think that all a plumber does is play with dookie and stools, and there's a lot more than that. Yeah, it's a trade you're going to get dirty in. You're going to get cuts, burns, abrasions — it's a physical trade. It's also a very well-paying industry."

Nelson said people don't understand it's not a brain-dead trade — that a plumber has to have some sort of intellect to do the trade.

"Everybody holds, it's a dumb construction worker. I've lived with that image my whole life, but it's not," he said. "I mean, there are some very intelligent, articulate people out there in the trade, and it takes that to build a building."

His wife said Nelson is an extremely good plumber and that she trusts him to know his job.

"He's very good at what he does, and he takes a lot of pride in his work," Deborah said. "He likes diagnosing the problem. He's very conscientious. He's a perfectionist."

Todd Boudreau, owner of Maximum Comfort Services, also said Nelson is a perfectionist, and said he is highly skilled, very honorable and dependable.

"He does first-class work. It will either be done right, or he won't do it," Boudreau said. "He wants to do it right the first time."

Nelson said many of the jokes about plumbers have no basis.

"We are the butt of jokes, plumber's crack and all that stuff — that doesn't happen. Most people are pretty respectable. I won't tolerate some guy with his pants hanging down working around me. It's funny, though, that our society sees it as that."

Nelson said he likes his job most because he sees a lot of different places and people.

"I like meeting people. I think that's probably the most interesting thing," he said.

Meeting people might be an added plus for Nelson, but he said he truly enjoys his trade of plumbing.

"It's really kind of interesting to get into because there's not much in life that isn't affected by the plumber," Nelson says. "From the time you get up in the morning to the time you go to bed, the plumber did something, somewhere to help you get through the day."

Facilities already feeling effects from lack of funds, hiring freeze

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

While employees at K-State's Division of Facilities are not sure how the proposed budget cuts could affect the department in the long run, small changes already have occurred.

"We are unable to buy needed equipment because of the shortage of money," said Ed Rice, associate vice president of facilities.

He said the biggest effect of the proposed budget cuts so far is the freezing of positions.

"We are unable to hire anyone at this time, but we do have positions open," he said.

Rice said this makes it a little harder on everyone.

"We have had to squeeze in order for others to cover the work," he said.

Even with the lack of funds, though, Rice said they will find ways to get by.

"We will use the money saved from not being able to hire anyone," he said.

There is one decision the facilities department is not considering.

"There will definitely not be any staff cuts to make up for lost money," he said. "We are just unable to hire anyone at this time."

John Struve, campus budget director, said that as of right now, the budget freeze is indefinite.

"Everything depends on the legislature," he said. "Hopefully, if things are resolved, full funding can be restored and the hiring freeze lifted."

Struve said they are working toward a resolution through the political arena.

"It wouldn't surprise me if this continued in to the next fiscal year, after July 1," he said.

Options for K-State's preparation for a possible budget cut are unclear.

"We can only prepare for the eventuality of next year," Struve said.

Rice said facilities will wait to make final decisions.

"Until we have a firm idea of how much money is going to be cut, we cannot make any major decisions at this time," he said.

Rec Complex to be unaffected by cuts

By JESSICA LEDUC
Kansas State Collegian

Students can rest assured that Gov. Bill Graves' proposed budget cuts will not affect their use of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"We're basically run by the students," said Derek Walters, associate director of recreational services. "I can't see it affecting us."

Most of the Rec Complex's funding comes from a portion of the privilege fees that students pay and sales from facility use cards. The state is not relied on for most of the money.

"A small percentage of our budget comes from the state," Walters said. "The majority of that small percentage we get from the state goes for the custodial staff."

The money that comes into the Rec Complex from student privilege fees is what pays for the operation of the complex and salaries of its employees.

Walters said the Rec

Complex should not have any budgeting problems because it has been able to maintain the same budget for several years.

"We haven't asked Student Senate for any more money," Walters said. "We're proud of the fact that of the student money we get, the majority goes back into students' pockets."

While the Rec Complex appears to be safe from proposed budget cuts, the effect they could have on Bramlage Coliseum and Ahearn Field House is uncertain.

"We don't know if they will come up with a solution at the local level, and we don't know how it will affect us," Charles Thomas, director of Bramlage, said.

Thomas said the cuts might affect student hiring because Bramlage spends more than $300,000 a year on student employees.

Bob Cavello, associate director of the Department of Inter-collegiate Athletics, said student athletes who use these facilities could possibly be affected.

"If the cuts affect Bramlage or Ahearn, where the athletes play, then it might impact the athletes," Cavello said. "If the facility isn't going to be lighted or heated as often, it may affect the staff that works there or the athletes that play there."

While athletic facilities might be affected, the athletic program itself appears to be safe.

"The athletic department is pretty much self-funded," Cavello said. "Ninety-five percent of it we generate ourselves, and five percent comes from the state, which will only affect five percent of our operations."

"Time spent laughing is time well spent," he said. "The more you do it, the better your life will be. I really believe this."

EVAN SEMÓN/Collegian

Jennie Washington Stout instructs her evening dance class. After graduating from K-State in 1997, Jennie became the co-director at The Washington Dance Studio alongside her mother, Sharron.

Jennie helps her mother with the business side by doing the bookkeeping, and Sharron teaches lessons to the younger students because she has more patience, Jennie said. Since Sharron didn't have dance education in college, Jennie's background adds strength to the studio's lessons.

They said all their time together hasn't caused many disagreements. "I enjoy coming to work and hanging out with my mom," Jennie said.

Jennie and Sharron split the 36 classes taught each week, and four assistant instructors from K-State's Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance help teach lessons. They both do freelance choreography, and Sharron choreographs the K-State singers.

A similar philosophy is used in Jennie and Sharron's teaching styles, they both said.

"Students don't just come in and learn dances," Sharron said. "We really stress technique."

Teaching with a hands-on approach is something Jennie said she and her mom both abide by.

The job is something Jennie and Sharron said they wouldn't trade.

"I come in from 10:30 to 9, but I don't consider it work because I love what I do," Jennie said.

One of the most rewarding things about their job is when they teach a student, and the student decides she wants dance to be a part of her future, they said. That's the case with Whitney Boomer, who took lessons at Washington Dance Studio and now instructs at the studio.

Boomer, freshman in dance, said Sharron and Jennie's uplifting attitudes and support influenced her to pursue dance.

"They're always supportive of every person that takes lessons at the studio," Boomer said. "They give attention to each individual and really honor each girl."

But influencing students to pursue dance in the future is not a main goal of the Washington Dance Studio.

"Even if they all don't walk away dancers, I hope everyone that leaves here feels they had a good time and feels good about themselves," Jennie said.

BUDGET CUTS

Faculty can't bring technological knowledge back to classrooms, which means some students might graduate without certain knowledge of technology.

"It could make it hard for them to compete," Fritchen said.

The conference also helps build knowledge of the school and status for the school among other universities, he said.

Fritchen said K-State is risking losing students to other states.

"There is a tendency to get what you pay for from the students' perspective and the taxpayers," he said. "If they can't get it at K-State, they will go somewhere else."

Faculty already might be going somewhere else. Some departments are having difficulty recruiting faculty.

About $8.4 million has been designated for faculty salary increases next year, but the raise wouldn't even make a dent in the gap between K-State faculty salaries and the salaries of faculty at peer institutions, King said.

Faculty salaries in the college of engineering are 38 percent below their peers, he said.

A chemical engineering graduate can make almost as much as a starting professor with a doctoral degree, King said.

Competition for potential faculty members is especially difficult in technical fields because professionals can make more money in the private sector, said Brad Kramer, chair of the industrial and mechanical engineering department.

Young faculty could leave the university for institutions with higher pay and better facilities, Kramer said. The university does not want to become a training ground for other universities, he said.

Keeping classes should be paramount, Erin Green, sophomore in chemical engineering, said.

"The emphasis should be on maintaining services for the students," she said.

Maintaining diversity in the types of classes offered is important, Jacob Lowery, freshman in electrical engineering, said.

"I would be disappointed if there was something I wanted to take and it was not there," he said.

He and Rebecca Loyd, sophomore in chemical engineering, said they both were concerned about potential increases in class size.

"Class size being larger would be a big disadvantage if you are in the College of Engineering," Loyd said. "It helps a lot to be able to communicate with your teacher and ask them for help."

Nevertheless, any future violation of the Principles and Standards of Sportsmanship could result in additional penalties, including a suspension from coaching.

Wooldridge issued a statement Tuesday regarding the Big 12's reprimand: "We (Urick and myself) have had some positive dialogue with Commissioner Weiberg and the Big 12 Conference office over the past two days. I realize I made an error in judgment in making my comments on Saturday, but I do not want those in any way to take away from Oklahoma State's hard-fought victory."

"I certainly understand my responsibility as a head coach and take that very seriously. I fully intend to be accountable for my actions both on and off the floor, and will make every effort to make sure there are no future incidents."

DRIVING DILEMMA

Wintry weather hits campus roads hard

By KRISTEN DYMAČEK
Kansas State Collegian

Alisha Attaway had a jolt a few nights ago when she was driving to a convenience store.

Attaway, junior in pre-nursing, said that when she reached the intersection of Claflin Road and Denison Avenue, her car hit a large pothole.

"My car almost got lost in that pothole," she said.

Even though her car wasn't damaged, Attaway said she is concerned that other potholes could cause some damage.

"They're all over campus," she said. "Although I've tried to commit every pothole to memory, I can't remember them all, and I end up hitting a few."

Attaway said she understands potholes are common this time of year, but she's ready for them to be fixed.

"I understand weather can be a major factor, but these potholes have been a problem all year, and they just keep getting worse," she said.

Randy Slover, director of maintenance, said the Division of Facilities is aware of the pothole problem. He said some of the worst areas on campus are along Claflin Road and Mid Campus Drive.

"There are some pretty major potholes out there now," Slover said.

Most of the potholes have occurred because of the last few ice and snow storms, he said.

"The majority of the problems are from the cold," Slover said. "Plus, the snowplows that are trying to get the ice and snow off the roads end up tearing chunks out, leaving big potholes."

He said trying to repair them now is almost impossible.

"Right now, we can't do anything until it warms up and dries off," he said.

Facilities tried to temporarily repair some potholes along Claflin Road near Weber Hall two weeks ago, Slover said, but the patches haven't stayed.

"After this last storm, they popped back up," he said.

ABOVE: Motorists who travel Mid Campus Drive and other campus roads must dodge several large potholes, including this one at the entrance to the parking lot just north of Shellenberger Hall. Campus officials cite the harsh winter weather as the reason the road deterioration. LEFT: The curb along Mid Campus Drive near Claflin Road is in worse shape than portions of the road it bounds.

Salina faces adjustment from cuts

By COLLEEN FOOTE
Kansas State Collegian

The College of Technology and Aviation at K-State-Salina will have to find new ways to adjust if the proposed budget cuts are passed by the Kansas Legislature.

Dennis Kuhlman, dean of the College of Technology and Aviation, said if the budget cut is mandated, it would cause a crisis for the college.

"Since we are the technology college it is essential that we have all of the up-to-date equipment necessary for students," Kuhlman said. "I don't know what our exact strategy will be, but it's a huge cut, and there is no way getting around it."

A decrease in funds for the library, aviation equipment, faculty, technology and basic instructional items could cause a loss between $100,000 and $150,000, Kuhlman said.

Another problem, he said, comes from the inability to repair or replace equipment when needed. Without the adequate funding, it will be almost impossible to keep up-to-date with the latest equipment for technology and aviation, and the equipment could be in even worse condition if harsh winter conditions persist, Kuhlman said.

"I guess it's just politics as usual," he said. "It gets worse every year. The equipment just keeps getting older and older, and how do you replace it?"

Sharon McGee, assistant professor at K-State-Salina, said the temporary hiring freeze does not allow them to provide students with a quality education.

"Right now, it obviously means we won't hire new faculty," McGee said. "But we are already stretched thin with faculty here."

There is a false image among some people that the proposed budget cuts only affects faculty incomes, she said.

"We're all hurting across the board," McGee said. "Every student and faculty member will be affected by this."

K-State-Salina differs from other colleges at K-State-Manhattan because it has more hands-on lab classes that require numerous instructional tools, said John Heblein, a mathematics instructor at K-State-Salina. With budget cuts, the ability to provide the necessary instructional items will be difficult, he said.

"Due to the nature of our college and the amount of money it costs to fly airplanes it will cause a tremendous effect on that," Heblein said. "It takes an awful lot of money to go to school, especially in the aviation program."

It will take a long time to adjust and become caught up for the losses the budget cuts will cause, he said.

"I can understand the governor needing to tighten his belt, but I wish he was more honest and straightforward about what this would do," Heblein said. "It was very misleading how he presented it."

K-State-Salina's Student Governing Association was active in Topeka and met with local legislators to discuss the proposed budget cuts, Kuhlman said.

"I think behind every dark cloud there is some silver lining," he said. "We'll work through this type of situation. Right now, we will work as hard as we can to provide the quality education that our students deserve."

Potholes equal profit for Manhattan business

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Business is picking up for Mike Dungey, manager of Wildcat Amoco, because of an increasing number of potholes on city streets, but he might be the only one smiling at the problem.

"We have seen extra customers because of the potholes. It is great for us," Dungey said, "but the people that bring their cars in are definitely not happy about it."

Dungey said his customers often ask him to note on the ticket that the damage was caused by a pothole.

"They think they are going to get money back, but in most cases I don't think they are," he said. "Manhattan has definitely been spoiled as far as weather the last 10 years, because this is the most business we have received due to potholes in a long time."

Chuck Williams, assistant director of public works for the city of Manhattan, said they are fighting an ongoing battle with the potholes and will not compensate for damages in most cases.

"They are almost exclusively caused by the weather," Williams said. "We are in a freeze-and-thaw cycle of weather, and until we get some constant warmer weather, we are just going to go around in circles. There are some things we just don't have total control over, and this is one of them."

The potholes mostly are caused by moisture that seeps into cracks of pavement during the warmer daytime hours, and then when temperatures start to drop at night, the water freezes and expands, causing cracks in the pavement, Williams said.

"We are continuously patching the same pothole," he said. "This is a problem across the state right now because of the unusually cold winter."

Another problem the city faces is the only material available to them this time of year is not the most

Mike Dungey, manager of Wildcat Amoco, said his business recently has increased as a result of the worsening potholes in Manhattan. MIKE SHEPHERD/Collegian effective for patching potholes.

"We can only obtain coal-patch material," Williams said. "We can fill the holes, but it doesn't stick well in cold weather. It stays for a while and then it pops back out."

Williams said they have not received many complaints about the potholes.

"I think the community is pretty understanding," he said. "They see us out there working, and they know we are making an attempt to fix and control the problem."

However, Dungey said a lot of his customers have a different attitude.

"Some are just down right mad," he said. "I have done more alignments in the last month than I have done in the last eight months."

Residents voice fears, concerns over crack in apartment ceiling

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Less than a month after two apartments were condemned for a ceiling buckling in the Chase Manhattan Apartment complex, another case has been reported to the management.

Jessica Lanning, who lives in a four-bedroom apartment at 1430 Watson Place, Apt. 9, said her ceiling began to crack after the residents upstairs had a party Feb. 10.

"We contacted the emergency maintenance as soon as it happened," Lanning, sophomore in elementary education, said, "and the maintenance man came out the next morning."

Lanning said she contacted the apartment manager Feb. 13, and they promised her a solution within a week. However, Lanning said no steps have been taken yet to fix the problem.

"They are totally not letting us know what is going on," she said. "The maintenance man has come out and looked at the apartment, but they haven't begun the repairs yet. It is starting to get scary because our whole ceiling shakes every time someone from the upstairs apartment walks across their living room."

Corey Anderson, who lives in the upstairs apartment, said he and his roommates are concerned about the problem, but don't feel they are in immediate danger.

"Our floor in the living room is definitely sinking," Anderson, sophomore in engineering, said. "We can feel the slope when we walk over it, but I think the majority of the danger is in the apartment below us. They can actually touch the ceiling in their living room."

Anderson said he was in the downstairs apartment while the party was going on above in his apartment.

"I saw the ceiling start to crack, so I went upstairs and made everyone get out before it got worse," he said. "We only had around 50 people in the apartment, which is not unusual for a Chase gathering."

The incident follows the Jan. 29 condemnation of two apartments in the same complex after a floor buckled in one apartment and the ceiling began to sink in the apartment below.

According to a written statement from Sheryl Kranowsky, regional manager for First Property Management in Lawrence, "The investigation has determined that the primary cause of the floor joist buckling in unit H-16 was the unusual load factor resulting from an estimated 80-120 people being in the unit at the party."

However, Dusty Lohmann, a resident of H-16 at the time of the incident, said he disagrees with that statement.

"There is no way we had that many people in our apartment," Lohmann, sophomore in environmental design, said. "We had around 35 to 40 people at the party, and we have videotape showing that. Their statement is totally untrue."

Continuing in the written statement, Kranowsky said First Property Management has retained architects and engineers to complete an inspection of each unit at the complex and confirm the Preliminary hearing set for February shooting

A preliminary hearing has been set for a man who was charged with attempted second degree murder Feb. 18.

The hearing for Matthew Ryan Muse, 22, 417 Fremont St., has been scheduled for March 5.

Muse is charged with attempted second degree murder in the shooting of Kenneth D. Smith, of Milford, Kan.

Smith's friend stopped an officer in the 1800 block of Anderson Avenue and told him his friend had been shot.

Senate committee holds beer keg tracking bill

TOPEKA — A Senate committee has put off voting on a bill that would require liquor stores to keep track of who purchases beer kegs because members had too many questions.

Some committee members wondered whether cities and counties could exempt themselves from the bill's provisions, while others wondered how it would be enforced.

The bill is designed to discourage adults from buying beer kegs for parties at which underage drinkers are present. Critics suggest it wouldn't prevent underage drinking and would open liquor store owners to lawsuits.

It would require stores to give all containers with more than 4 gallons of beer an identification number and record who buys them. Law enforcement officials then could check a store's record if they busted a beer bash and no one claimed the keg.

The proposal was drafted by Sen. Jim Barnett, R-Emporia, a doctor. It faces heavy opposition from clubs, taverns, retail stores and distributors of alcoholic beverages.

The committee had planned to vote Wednesday, but Barnett agreed to delay action and have the Legislature's staff draft a new version, to deal with technical issues. He said committee members have legitimate questions.

Beer keg bills have been introduced and received hearings in recent years, but never have cleared a committee.

"It demonstrates how this committee has probably never worked this bill," Barnett said.

But Amy Campbell, a lobbyist for the Kansas Association of Beverage Retailers, said the committee's debate shows that underage drinking is a complicated problem.

"If there were any simple solutions to those problems, they would have been put in place a long time ago," Campbell said.

Police arrest revelers in Seattle, Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA — Mardi Gras revelry turned violent early Wednesday in Seattle and Philadelphia, with crowds fighting, smashing storefronts and looting, and police fought back on horseback and with pepper spray.

Some 100 people were arrested in Philadelphia. About 70 people were injured in Seattle and two of them were described as in severely critical condition with head injuries, one from a fall off an overpass.

By contrast, the more notorious pre-Lenten partying in New Orleans was largely peaceful, even though upward of a million people — many in costume and some in little more than a smile — had jammed the streets as Fat Tuesday jiggled and giggled its way into Ash Wednesday.

Philadelphia revelers smashed windows and dozens of people looted a liquor store and other businesses on South Street, a trendy stretch of bars and shops at the edge of downtown. It took police about an hour to clear the street.

"Disappointing" is the only word I can think to say," city managing director Joe Martz said early Wednesday as he walked down the street strewn with trash, broken glass, empty beer cans and a few lace bras. "It's disgraceful."

At a news conference Wednesday, Philadelphia Mayor John Street said he wouldn't call for cancellation of the annual event, although officials had discussed a curfew or other restrictions.

City Councilman Frank DiCicco said businesses that promote the event should take some responsibility for it.

"Those businesses who are pumping people full of booze from 7 a.m. in the morning until they basically explode should be held accountable," DiCicco said Wednesday.

Most of the Philadelphia arrests were for public drunkenness, disorderly conduct and fighting. Most defendants were fined $300.

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian

Travis Lenkner and Mary Bosco, student body president and vice president candidates, are running on the campaign slogan "Expect more." Among the pairs platform issues are SafeRide and uses of the Wildcat ID Card.

Lenkner, Bosco discuss platform

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

Travis Lenkner and Mary Bosco are campaigning for the student body presidency, and they want students to "Expect More."

The pair is campaigning by visiting groups across the Manhattan campus and in Salina at night. During the daytime, they hang out at a table in the K-State Student Union talking with students about their campaign issues.

"We've told all the groups that we talked to that we will be back," Lenkner said. "If we win, we will be back. We are not just showing up to campaign and leave them alone."

The campaign centers around four platform issues.

A platform, Bosco said, was derived from planning, and brainstorming with the needs of students.

"We came up with kind of a laundry list of ideas, and picked the ones that would effect students the most, and would be the most achievable," Bosco said.

The platform calls for increased uses of the Wildcat ID Card, by expanding the use of its smart chip. Bosco said this would make it a universal card for every student's needs on campus and in Manhattan.

The platform also calls for Options for Safe Transportation as part of the city's transportation program.

Lenkner and Bosco support SafeRide as a part of the issue. The pair would work to see that a citywide transportation program is passed.

If it does not pass, an option would be to seek

ship in order to

on poten-

fees created by SafeRide.

"The big issue was liability," he said. "People didn't think we could do it two years ago because of liability.

Other schools are doing it — we can do it."

Bosco said night-time safety needs to be improved.

"Right now we have nothing," she said. "We don't even have a list of numbers in a bar you can call for a taxi service."

A universal system for waiting lists is another issue the campaign would address. Lenkner said students need a universitywide system of getting into classes. Under the plan, students waiting for a class would be notified when an opening becomes available.

"If we had a waitlist that worked in November, then we wouldn't have to deal with all of these issues in January," Lenkner said.

Another issue on the platform is the increased promotion of campus events. Currently, the two said campus events are not well publicized, and a central location for information is necessary. An improved university calendar, they said, would benefit students.

"We spend a lot of student money to bring in activities that people enjoy when they know about them," Lenkner said. "We need to notify them of the events so they can go."

While the campaign focuses on the four core issues, Lenkner and Bosco said they will continue to do more.

They will also work in the state legislature and on campus to represent the students' needs.

While the pair has been involved in student senate and with other organizations, they believe they have fresh leadership ideas.

"It is a challenge to prove we are not the status quo," Lenkner said. "We have different ideas, experience and approach to the job."

"Experience doesn't lock you into acting like everyone else, but it gives you background knowledge so that you can step in with your own style and be successful."

Earthquake rocks Seattle; thousands without power

By LUIS CABRERA
The Associated Press

SEATTLE — A strong earthquake shook the Pacific Northwest on Wednesday, sending people fleeing into the streets of Seattle and knocking out power to thousands. There were no reports of injuries.

The magnitude 7.0 earthquake hit at 10:55 a.m., according to the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo. It was centered 35 miles southwest of Seattle and felt across the region, as far away as Salt Lake City, 700 miles away, and into Canada.

"Everyone was panicked," said Paulette DeRooy, who was in an elevator descending from the 15th floor of a Seattle building when the earthquake struck. She and several others scrambled out and onto a fire escape.

Screams erupted at a nearby hotel, where Microsoft founder Bill Gates was addressing an education and technology conference. He was whisked away as his audience bolted for the exits. Some audience members were knocked down by others trying to get out, and overhead lights fell to the floor.

The Seattle airport was closed, and the tower and other offices were evacuated. Federal Aviation Administration spokesman William Shumann said.

The FAA ordered a national ground stop for Seattle, which means no flights to the Northwest's largest city were being allowed to take off anywhere in the country. The center handling air traffic in Washington and Oregon, near Auburn, Wash., was operating on backup power.

Utility officials estimated that 17,000 customers in the Seattle area were without power.

In Olympia, about 10 miles from the epicenter, legislators, government workers and visiting school children flooded out of the Capitol and other buildings. The state Senate was in session.

"The chandelier started going and the floor started shaking. Someone yelled get under the table and so we did," Sen. Bob Morton said. "The sudden violence let us know that this was a bad one."

Cracked plaster, gilt and even paintings fell from the walls, but Morton said he saw no sign of major structural damage.

Officials were particularly afraid the Capitol dome would collapse and people linked hands as they walked down the marble stairs under the heavy dome.

"If that rascal had tumbled down, it would have been all over," Morton said.

Seattle's popular Pioneer Square neighborhood, site of recent Mardi Gras riots, was damaged. Bricks from buildings were piled up on sidewalks. Structural damage also was reported at Bellevue Community College, which was shut down for the day.

"I thought a car had hit my building," said Sam Song, who owns a restaurant in Everett, 30 miles north of Seattle. "Then the ground started moving around."

In downtown Portland, Ore., office buildings swayed for 20 to 30 seconds. The Multnomah County Courthouse was evacuated and employees were gathered in a park across the street while officials inspected for damage.

Dining etiquette focus of workshop

By HEATHER GRACE
Kansas State Collegian

Students will get a chance to learn the finer points of dining at K-State's Dining Etiquette Workshop today at 5:30 p.m. in the Derby Dining Center Gold Room.

Jason Bradenburg of Career and Employment Services said the annual workshop is to prepare students for upcoming job interviews that may be conducted at a business or formal dinner setting.

Kevin Hartman, senior in agronomy, said he participated in the event last year for class points, but that it turned out to be helpful and educational.

"I learned things that I never thought about before but that could be important to an interviewer," Hartman said.

Pat Pesci, director of K-State's hotel and restaurant management program, will lead the workshop by going through some rules of table manners.

Participants will begin the workshop by eating a buffet-style dinner. Throughout the course, they will learn certain rules of manners and etiquette. This includes when to use different utensils and where to place a table napkin. Pesci will not only address what is proper, but also what is not acceptable at a formal dinner setting.

Throughout the dinner, students will be allowed to ask questions.

Bradenburg, graduate student in psychology, said the class of about 100 participants had to pre-enroll.

John Steinfert, senior in milling science, said he grew up in a household where etiquette was important, but he thinks that one can never do too much preparing.

"All employers are different. To some, etiquette will be important, and to some, it won't," Steinfert said.

"But I think doing something like the etiquette workshop helps to show professionalism. Plus, it's a good way to meet people, and it's a good meal for $5. You can't beat that."

How well have you been prepared by your adviser for graduation?

Well, let's see, my four years at K-State have taught me how to deal with insane budget cuts, inept middle managers and an apathetic upper management. I would say, yeah, I think I'm pretty well prepared to go deal in the back-stabbing world of business. Thanks a lot, K-State.

Before my nine-month internship, my adviser said, "Don't worry, you'll graduate on time — I'll take care of everything." I get back and he's been replaced. I said, "Where did he go?" And they said, "Where did who go?" And they were laughing at me.

We have a men's basketball team?

My grandma could ref better than the ones at the Rec.

Two men walk into a bar, the other one ducks. Now that's comedy. "Monkey Boy" is pointless.

Why is it that we can e-mail the whole student body about basketball games, but not about class closings?

Intramural refs are the worst thing that has ever happened to basketball.

I would like to congratulate the K-State women's golf team on a fine performance this weekend at Tucson, Arizona. Way to go.

Do you know the best way to cut down underage drinking? Lower the drinking age to 18.

Public announcement to Lenkner and Bosco: The Wildcat Card, it already does that.

It's Fat Tuesday, and I am in a room with five other drunk guys. I just realized I am a loser.

I've been to K-State for four years and I have never witnessed a more pathetic Fat Tuesday in Aggieville. Thank you.

If every K-State student called their state senator, state representative and the governor's office there wouldn't be a problem. Students only have themselves to blame.

I know what you mean, Sarah. I was lucky enough to find my best friend; I married her. I love you, Karen.

So Wooldridge got reprimanded for protesting a call? I say give him a raise.

Thank you, Sarah McCaffrey. I keep forgetting that my friends from high school are absolutely meaningless to me.

I am glad the language lab in Eisenhower is up to university standards. The programs don't work, the computers freeze and you can never print. Which brings me to another point, what moron hooked the computers up to that printer?

It's funny how the elections have only begun and I am already sick of hearing about them.

Hey "Monkey Boy," maybe you should change your title to "Plagiarized Crap."

If the Big 12 can't see why Coach Wooldridge is mad, then it hasn't been watching any of K-State's basketball games recently.

I really enjoyed Dan Smith's article about Finway Park. It's nice to see that tradition in baseball is very important.

Question for Tuesday

Do you support the scope of President Bush's tax cut?

OPINION

Daydreaming to a degree

Importance of education easy to forget during long hours in class

When I first came to college I was very passionate about what I wanted to do.

There seemed to be a sense of purpose for me to obtain a higher level of education. Obtaining that diploma signified a chance to make a difference.

Somewhere hidden beneath the tests, the never ending to-do list and everything else, it seems there is now only a small token of that passion in existence.

Daydreaming in the majority of my classes is the only thing that keeps me going. Daydreaming about drinking a beer and watching a baseball game on a beautiful summer night.

Daydreaming about listening to Jimmy Buffett while washing my car with the sun dancing across my skin.

I am usually not thinking about those who herd sheep in Africa, the decline of sea otters or analyzing a short story.

This is not to say that education is not important in my life, but some of it just seems to drag on.

I don't think I am the only one.

From the kid who sits next to me and is half-asleep as we learn the characteristics of the traits of those who herd sheep, to the napping droid and blank look of those who seem to be in la-la-land during a lecture.

So what does a diploma signify?

Hours of hard work, cramming and the ability to follow the rules. It is up to the individual, the student, to push themselves to make something more out of college than what a professor usually expects.

But some times that just seems too hard to accomplish. Thank goodness professors don't take mental attendance, otherwise I would have been absent from the majority of my classes.

Physically, usually, I am there. Mentally, I could be in sunny L.A. or dancing in Ireland. While I sit in my geography class, my mind is eating pizza with my friends or wrapped up in a snowball fight.

While we discuss a short story, sometimes I am swimming through Velveeta on a raft made out of a Cheerio.

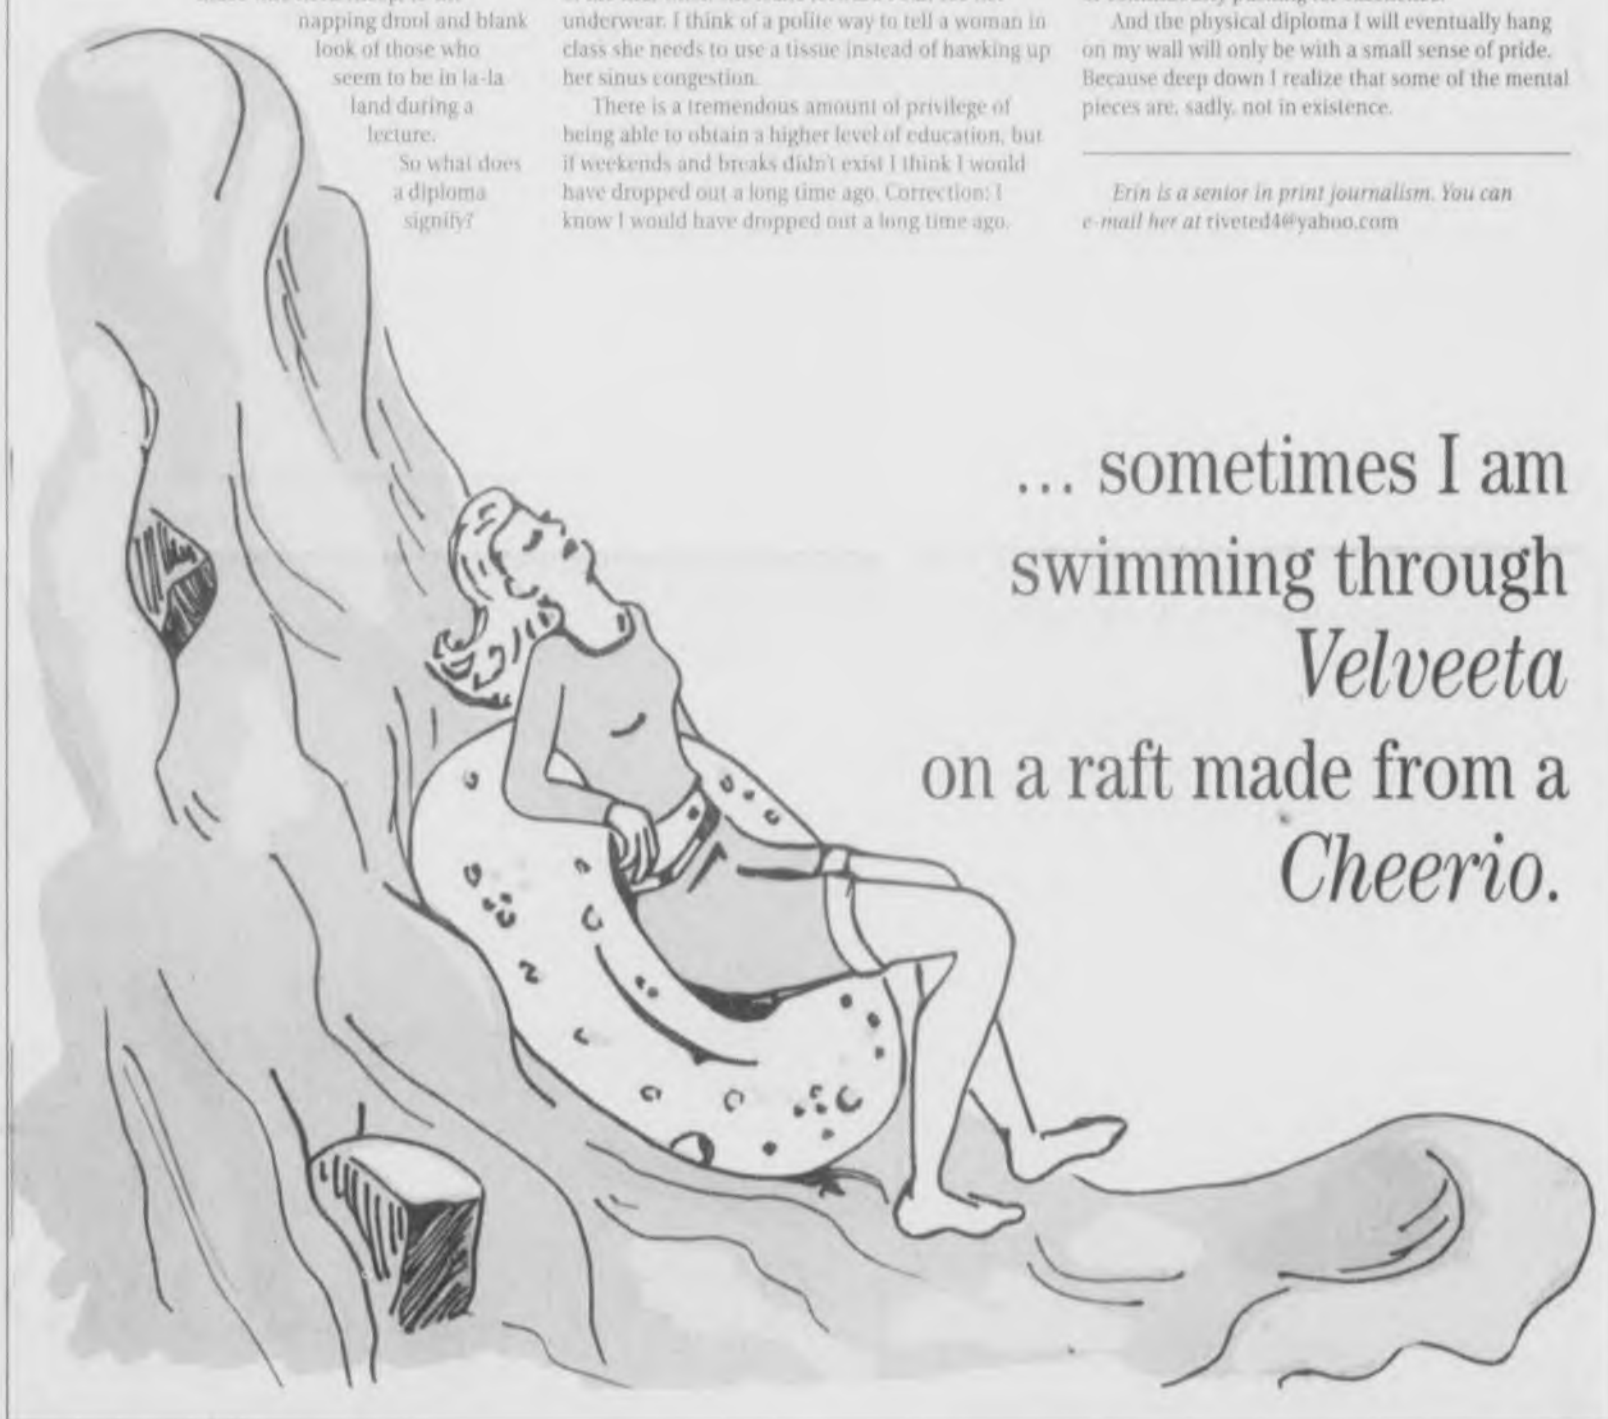

I don't want to comment on what I think of the cause of the Iranian crisis.

Instead I wonder if I should tell the girl in front of me that when she leans forward I can see her underwear. I think of a polite way to tell a woman in class she needs to use a tissue instead of hawking up her sinus congestion.

There is a tremendous amount of privilege of being able to obtain a higher level of education, but if weekends and breaks didn't exist I think I would have dropped out a long time ago. Correction: I know I would have dropped out a long time ago.

Lenkner, Bosco want students to 'expect more'

Expect more.

That's our campaign slogan, and we mean it.

You should expect more than the status quo.

You should expect student leaders who are dedicated and determined to make changes on campus.

You should expect leaders with experience, who can represent you most effectively to the university, the legislature and the Kansas Board of Regents.

But you should "expect more."

We're running for student body president and vice president because we believe K-State students deserve the best — a hardworking team of students who will make good on their campaign issues and strive for progress.

Our campaign is based on several themes, but we also have proposed specific platform issues to demonstrate our commitment to making K-State better:

We think you should expect more from your Wildcat ID card. The card was developed to benefit every student, but most of us only use it to get into the Rec or football games.

We will work to expand the uses of the card's "smart chip" so that students who don't want to open a new bank account still can use their card on campus and in the community. Developing the smart chip would allow you to use it in the food court and bookstore in the K-State Student Union, for laundry in the residence halls, or at area businesses once the system is developed.

Students should expect more from online enrollment, specifically from online waiting lists. Our current system makes it difficult for students to know how to obtain a seat in a course that is full or closed. A uniform standard should be enforced across campus: Use the KATS waiting lists.

But we want more than that for students. We will work to implement automatic, online lists. Students on wait lists would be notified by e-mail and automatically enrolled if a spot became available. It's a fair — and realistic — goal.

GUEST VIEW
MARY BOSCO

Students should expect more options for safe transportation. A recent study showed 89 percent of students believe a SafeRide system would make our campus and community safer. Yet we are one of the few schools in the Big 12 Conference without a SafeRide program.

This issue has been ignored for far too long. We believe safety is important and we will work to build a system on which students can rely. There are several options, including SafeRide, as part of a city transportation system or seeking private and corporate funding.

Regardless of how the system is implemented, we believe something should be done. We will work to improve safety and promote safe and sober transportation for students.

Also, students should expect more from campus events. We pay several privilege fees to provide campus activities, but there is no central calendar to promote events. We want to strengthen the online university calendar to provide one site that students can visit for information on any kind of event or deadline. This will help boost attendance at events and improve the quality of activities.

Our platform ideas are unique and they will make K-State better for every student. But most importantly, our ideas are achievable. We wouldn't have considered running if we couldn't guarantee results. We can.

When you cast your online ballot next week, vote for the team of leaders with the best ideas, the most experience and the willingness to work non-stop throughout the next year to make K-State better for students.

Vote for Travis Lenkner and Mary Bosco. And expect more.

Travis is a senior in print journalism and pre-law. Mary is a senior in public relations. You can e-mail them at expect@ksu.edu or visit their Web site at www.ksu.edu/expectmore.

Mad cow disease affects livestock, farms worldwide

By OLENA NIKOLAYENKO
Kansas State Collegian

Growing up in Manchester, Natalie Farmer, senior in mass communications, has witnessed how England became swept away by the outbreak of mad cow disease.

"People got really scared because they did not know how to solve the problem," Farmer said.

She said nobody she knew caught the human form of the disease. However, she found the scenes on television awful.

"They showed on TV people who went backwards," Farmer said. "For example, a 30-year old woman will be like a 13-year old in three months."

She said those affected by the disease couldn't think for themselves.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy, also known as "mad cow" disease, is a degenerative disease affecting the central nervous system of cattle.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease is a rare neurological disease that is the human variant of BSE. Patients afflicted with CJD experience psychiatric symptoms such as depression, earlier loss of coordination and later onset of dementia. CJD has occurred almost exclusively in people under the age of 55, a number of whom were teenagers, and it typically strikes people over 55, according to the National Cattlemen's Beef Association.

Beef, though, remains an essential item on the menu in Britain because it is part of their culture.

"Beef is a traditional dish — with potatoes and gravy," Farmer said. "My grandparents never stopped eating beef."

Specialists abroad have taken preventive measures against such a crisis. Kansas farmers have worked to prevent BSE outbreak.

"We don't have any case of BSE in the USA," said Mark Spire, beef specialist at the Food Animal Health and Management Center at the College of Veterinary Medicine. "It would be devastating to the beef industry in Kansas if it happened."

"We are known as the wheat state, but we are actually the beef state. We are the No. 2 cattle feed industry in the United States and the No. 1 cattle slaughter industry."

Spire is on the National Cattlemen's Beef Association Animal Health and Well-Being Committee that deals with emerging diseases.

"From monitoring and banning the importation of live animals and beef products, the industry feels it has taken pretty good steps to prevent the outbreak in the USA," he said.

The USDA launched its surveillance program for BSE in 1990. All "Over the past 12 months, our department has made probably 10 investigations of CNS disorders," he said. "In most cases, the animal was sacrificed and the brain submitted for test. All submissions were negative for BSE."

■ Foot, mouth virus scare causes German officials to seal off 2 farms; preliminary tests of sheep negative.

By TONY CZUCZKA

The Associated Press

BERLIN — Worried that Britain's foot-and-mouth outbreak could spread to the European continent, German authorities sealed off two farms Wednesday after officials said imported sheep there were exposed to the disease.

However, the government said there was no reason for panic after preliminary tests for the foot-and-mouth virus on three suspect sheep came up negative Wednesday. The sheep had tested positive for antibodies to the disease, indicating they had been in contact with infected animals.

"The further tests carried out so far show that with great probability there was no infection," said Sigrun Neuwerth, spokeswoman for the ministry of consumer protection and agriculture. "So we have no genuine suspected cases in Germany."

The tests were carried out on remains of some of 350 sheep from two farms in North Rhine-Westphalia state that were destroyed in recent days because they had come from a British farm hit by foot-and-mouth disease. Two rounds of tests found no trace of the virus, and results of a third, final test were expected by Thursday, Neuwerth said.

Taking no chances, state farm inspectors earlier ordered two-mile exclusion zones around the farms Wednesday, keeping watch for livestock movements in and out of the zone and putting up warning signs.

People were not being barred from the zones around the farms, located near the Dutch border in the towns of Neuss and Aachen.

Earlier, state environment minister Baerbel Hoehn said a foot-and-mouth outbreak, if confirmed, would be a "disaster scenario."

For German farmers, the new scare came on top of the country's outbreak of mad cow disease that began last November. Gerd Sonnleitner, head of the nation's main farmers' association, said his group had warned members to keep outsiders away from their livestock and carefully observe their animals for signs of foot-and-mouth disease, according to Focus-Money magazine.

In Schleswig-Holstein, authorities said Wednesday they have sealed off a farm with 31 pigs imported from Britain six weeks ago until the results of blood tests on the animals come back. Other German states are asking veterinarians to step up checks for foot-and-mouth disease and emergency vaccination plans.

German airports have already placed food entering from Britain — anything containing meat or dairy products — under suspicion as possible carrier of foot-and-mouth disease. Customs officers were confiscating uneaten sandwiches from passengers arriving from Britain and distributing leaflets explaining precautions against spreading the disease.

In Britain, the government confirmed four new cases Wednesday, raising the number of affected farms and slaughterhouses to 22.

Chief veterinary officer Jim Scudamore said cases had been confirmed in Wales, in Hereford in western England and in the northern English county of Lancashire.

Some 11,000 animals — 1,000 cattle, 8,500 sheep and 1,500 pigs — have been slaughtered since the weekend or are awaiting slaughter as authorities try to avoid a repeat of a 1967 foot-and-mouth epidemic, when half a million animals were culled.

Public life in Britain has increasingly ground to a standstill. Authorities closed public footpaths, canceled horse races and called off various sports events, adding to precautions aiming to minimize the possibility of humans carrying the virus.

Although humans almost never catch the disease — which affects cloven-hoofed animals — they can carry it on boots and clothing. The virus can also be airborne, transmitted from one animal to another, or contracted through contaminated feed.

1st black member of NY Stock Exchange discusses racism, success

By KAREN MAYSE
Kansas State Collegian

Nothing in life is easy, Joseph L. Searles III, the first black member of the New York Stock Exchange, said Wednesday to a packed audience in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union. He said the way to success is to have confidence in yourself and have good ideas.

"Sometimes you have to go against the tide," Searles said. "Even to the extent that you get reamed out royally by someone that employs you."

Searles was also a former investment and commercial banker with Newburger, Loeb and Company. He graduated from K-State in the top 10 of his class in 1963 with a bachelor's degree in political science. Searles is currently a consultant and developer in Harlem, N.Y.

In his speech, titled "The Color of Money," Searles shared incidents of prejudice he experienced as a young black man growing up in Texas in the mid-1950s. By the time he came to K-State, he said he was determined to use whatever I could to get ahead so I could turn things around.

Searles became one of the early urban development specialists credited with using mainstream strategies to transform the size and quality of minority business development. One of those strategies was recruiting major corporations to open businesses in minority communities.

Because of the risk, Searles said it was at first difficult to get businesses to listen. He convinced corporations such as Disney and Cinplex that locating branches in minority communities would increase their business with people who live there.

Those people have disposable income and crave quality goods and services, he said.

"The impact on my community was profound," he said. "What I did was create 800 jobs that weren't there before."

Students attending the lecture appreciated Searles' message of overcoming difficulties to achieve success.

"I think he did a wonderful job of articulating the theory that everything comes with hard work and that nothing is easy," said Dave Lingerfelt, junior in management of information systems.

Josh Stockebrand, junior in agriculture business, said he was most impressed with Searles' real-life examples.

"It was well worth my time," he said.

The Alumni Association and the College of Business sponsored the speech as part of Black History Month. Diana Caldwell, associate director of alumni programs, said the Alumni Association began working to bring Searles to campus one year ago.

"I think this kind of partnership takes that long to organize," she said.

SHOT DOWN

Phineas Atchison takes the ball up against Drew Gooden in Bramlage Coliseum during K-State's last home game of the season. The Cats take on Colorado this Saturday in Boulder.

Sophomore steps up for Cats

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

With only three Kansas natives in the Wildcat lineup, it might be fitting for one to step to the forefront against the intrastate rival Jayhawks.

For K-State on Wednesday night, it was Quentin Buchanan who seemed to answer that call.

The Junction City product scored 15 points on 7-for-16 shooting, with seven of those points coming in the game's first six and a half minutes.

"I think Quentin was trying to find his own stroke," point guard Larry Reid said. "He was playing confident and I liked that — when somebody else can step up and be a leader

Jayhawks' offensive arsenal too much for Wildcats in 65-77 loss

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

There were many differences between K-State and Kansas in the Cats' 65-77 loss Wednesday night. One was shot selection.

"That was the difference," forward Travis Reynolds said. "They were getting layups, and we were taking jumpshots."

Another was the Jayhawks' inside-outside game on offense.

"That's how they beat us," point guard Larry Reid said. "They pound it into the paint, and when we doubled down in the paint, they kicked it out and hit the open jumper."

Yet another difference was mistakes.

"Any slip on our behalf, any mistake on our behalf could turn into points for Kansas, and that's exactly what happened," head coach Jim Wooldridge said.

In the end, though, the main difference was weaponry. KU had a larger arsenal than K-State.

"We just didn't have enough weapons, perhaps, defensively or offensively to answer in the second half," Wooldridge said.

Not that the Cats didn't give the Jayhawks a game, however. In fact, until the final five minutes of the contest, K-State very much had a chance to win. With 5:36 remaining, the Cats, after facing a 13-point deficit seven minutes earlier, trailed by just six points, 54-60.

If the first half repeated itself, K-State actually had a chance to complete the comeback.

To start the game, K-State had jumped to a 13-7 lead. Then, Kansas head coach Roy Williams substituted for all five players at the 12:31 mark, and the five subs quickly scored five unanswered points. K-State's momentum was lost, and the Jayhawks eventually would take the lead.

"When they brought in those guys, and it was a chance, we were up by five or six then. We could have stretched the lead out a little bit," Reynolds said. "It could have really helped us, but it didn't."

The Jayhawks would run their lead to eight points, but K-State fought back, closing to within two points, 29-31, at halftime. As a result, the Cats felt they were in position to at least make the game close at the end.

"We needed to go into the half tied, up or only down by two, three, four or five, so it was a confidence booster for us to be only down two," Reynolds said. "We can come out in the second half and play with these guys."

But the beginning of the second half belonged to Kansas. Within seven minutes, the Jayhawks had extended their lead to 13 points, mostly through layups and shots in the paint, which is where that first difference between the teams kicked in.

"They were getting real good position. They were running their offense real well," Reynolds said. "They were moving the ball, running around a lot and getting the ball inside wherever they wanted to."

"Coach always tell us it's a layup game and you stop them from getting layups and you try and get as many as

Former quarterback shares experiences in book

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

All Zac Burton ever wanted to do was play football for K-State.

So when he got that chance, even though it meant playing in only one game, Burton enjoyed every moment of it. And now that the former fourth-string quarterback's days as a Cat player are over, he is sharing that experience with others in "Great Day To Be A Wildcat," the first book ever written about the K-State football program from a player's perspective.

"It's about the season, but there's parts of it that transcend all seasons," Burton said. "Nobody's ever written a book like this about K-State before, and there's 50,000 people in the stands every Saturday that want to know what we do behind the scenes."

While Burton saw very little actual game time, his experiences still qualified him to explain the inner workings of many aspects of the program, offensive coordinator and quarterback coach Ron Hudson.

"He was a big part of our success on the sidelines because he was talking with us on the sideline as a player, and he was listening to all the calls, and he was listening to all the adjustments and everything because he had a headset on," Hudson said. "He had a little more of an insight of what was going on than the normal player."

Burton uses that expertise and the normal player experiences to detail the nuts and bolts of K-State football, including team goals, recruiting, practice routines and rituals and rising stars. Burton's expertise, however, gave no cause for worry among the Cat staff that he might give away their trade secrets.

"There was no way we were going to feel like this was going to be a negative influence because he has been a real important part of this program, very important part, because of his attitude and his intelligence and his desire," Hudson said.

Not that there weren't opportunities for Burton to transform his story into the literary equivalent of "The Program." The book could have been made juicier. It could have bashed head coach Bill Snyder for not playing the author more, but that wouldn't be Burton's style.

"I wanted the book to be completely positive about K-State football," Burton said. "All I have is positive memories about K-State, and I think people want to read positive things. K-State's given a lot to me, and there's no reason that I want to in any way tarnish their name in any way."

Portraying a positive attitude is no act or facade, either. When Burton writes good things about football, it's because he believes them, his father, Brady, said.

"It's a real reflection of him and his personality. I think we've always talked about being positive and looking for the best in things and making the best of things," he said. "I think the feelings that come through in the book are genuine. I think he thoroughly enjoyed his years at K-State, not only football but academically. He's very proud of the whole campus from the academic end to the athletic end, and I think that's really reflected in his book."

Still, even with the book's success —

See BURTON on PAGE 10

Book gives new view of athletics

As a player, Zac Burton never could match the skills of fellow quarterbacks Jonathan Beasley and Eli Roberson, but it's doubtful they could equal his enthusiasm for K-State football.

Burton played just four minutes and 37 seconds as the fourth-string quarterback on the K-State football team last season, and he didn't play at all his junior season. Yet, every day still was a "Great Day To Be A Wildcat," as the name of his just-published book would suggest.

Despite being relegated to scout team status, just being a member of the K-State family was enough for Burton.

"A dream of his was to play in and be part of this program," Burton's quarterback coach Ron Hudson said. "He didn't get to play very much, but he did play, and he did get on the field, and that's something he'll always remember. I think he appreciates what people did for him and how they tried to help them. He's basically thanking them, and at the same time, giving his overall view of what the situation was here at Kansas State on the football team."

That view is contained within 185 paperback pages, much of which is committed to recounting the season's game-by-game action. There are many portions that get beyond the playing field and into the locker room, though, and at times, the descriptions, especially those of Wagner Field, are picturesque. Sometimes, the book touches the reader's emotions, but it never will win a Pulitzer Prize.

In reality, it's doubtful anyone outside of K-State followers will pursue its pages, but "Great Day To Be A Wildcat" indeed is something special — but not because it goes behind the scenes of Head Coach Bill Snyder's purple empire.

In fact, the shroud of secrecy behind much of the program never is lifted or penetrated. After finishing the book, fans still won't know how Snyder handles player discipline or the real reason Jarrod Cooper suddenly missed the Iowa State game.

The same is true for those looking for humorous, scandalous or tearjerking anecdotes of players and coaches. They, too, will be disappointed, as personality profiles are few and far between. There is one instance, though, where Burton succeeds in reaching the reader's heart. At the heart of the book's most poignant moment is a description of the man behind Snyder's disciplined, unemotional exterior.

During practice the week prior to the Colorado game, kicker Jamie Rheem had earned Snyder's wrath by missing two 50-yard field goals in practice. After missing the third try, the senior expected to be berated again.

Instead, Burton writes, "Coach Snyder took a couple of steps over to where Jamie was dejectedly standing, and put his hand on #15's shoulder pad. In a soft voice, he said, 'All right, son, all right.'"

The scene is touching but also unique. Few instances such as this appear in the book, but those that are present are the most effective at giving an inside look into K-State football.

With consideration given to the Snyder excerpt, though, what truly makes this book a worthwhile read is how it portrays the author.

Burton could have written the "Inside Edition" version of K-State football. He could have put all the players' faults on display, hacking away at the lofty image Snyder has worked so hard to build.

Burton could have taken revenge for receiving less on-field attention than the occasional fan-launched orange. But he didn't, simply because he loves the program — so much that he gave up an all-conference selection and starting position at Bethany College, where he had transferred after a redshirt year in Manhattan. He left fame just to be a part of the K-State program his junior and senior years.

"I think in the long run, he really missed the program at K-State and what it had to offer, and that's why he transferred back," his father, Brady, said. "And he transferred back knowing that he might never get on the field, or if he did, it would be real limited, but that was more important, being back on the program, than starting and playing a lot in a smaller program."

That's the story this book ends up telling, not of pregame meals and sideline organization, but of Burton's appreciation of all those things. While Burton never really mentions himself, the positive, upbeat voice used to narrate the book is unmistakably his.

The subtitle serves up what it promises:

Candidates get personal with talk-show hosts

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

While questions of creamy or crunchy peanut butter preference normally might be asked in an e-mail survey, they were topics of discussion introduced to the K-State presidential candidates Wednesday night.

KSDB-FM 91.9 presented "Getting to Know Your Presidential Candidates by Talking to Them."

The hourlong show was hosted by Phil Green, senior in political science, and Dan Neiss, senior in microbiology.

Green said this is the first time the candidates have had a chance to go on-air informally.

"It's just a casual way for students to hear from the candidates and get to know who they are," he said.

Matt Jolly, program director for the radio station, said candidates always had been on the air at election time, but in a more formal way.

"This lets the students get to know the candidates in a different way than they do through the speeches and debates," he said.

"Many people vote on the personalities of the candidates, and this was a way to bring that to them."

The show gave 30 minutes for each team, and each 30-minute segment was split into three parts.

In the "Lightning Round," Green and Neiss asked the candidates questions about pop culture so the audience could see each candidate's personality.

Rick Wooten, senior in mass communications, and Aaron Shea, senior in secondary education, were the first guests on the show.

Wooten and Shea answered questions ranging from where are the best restrooms on campus to where is the Iberian Peninsula.

"The Union restrooms are definitely the best — they are the nicest," Wooten said.

Pop culture questions eventually merged into more serious topics, such as questions about their candidacy.

"Students should take us seriously. We know what we are about," Wooten said.

Wooten said he thinks they are the right team to vote for in the upcoming election.

"Voting for everyone else is just a throwaway vote," he said.

This is the pair's third time to run for office.

"We are making a strong move. We earn more votes each year," Shea said.

Wooten and Shea informed the radio listeners of their platforms.

Their main focus is campaign funding.

"We are not spending any money on our campaign, and the money we receive from supporters will be donated to charity again," Wooten said.

Shea said he thinks there should be a limit on a candidate's amount of campaign spending.

"We want the elections to open up to all people. Every student should have a chance to run — with or without money," he said.

A portion of the show was supposed to be left open for callers to voice questions to the candidates. The station experienced technical difficulties with the phone, however, so the candidates did not have an opportunity to answer callers' questions.

questions.

The next candidates on the show were Ben Hopper, senior in agricultural communications, and Eric Engel, senior in electrical engineering.

Each pair answered a different set of questions in the lightning round. Hopper and Engel were given questions from what their favorite residence hall is to how they like their steak done.

"Goodnow is my favorite residential hall. I think they present very good programs for the students there," Hopper said.

The show covered their platform issues ranging from increasing diversity to increasing the funding for club sports.

Engel said their stance on diversity includes more than racial background.

"We want to expand all types of people, all types of background and all types of ideas on campus," he said.

Hopper said he believes the same group of people vote in the elections each year.

"We hope to reach out to all people on campus," he said. "We want to increase the turnout for SGA elections, and we are targeting the students who typically did not vote."

Hopper said he feels they have a good to chance to win the election.

"We have been actively campaigning, meeting lots of people and getting the issues out," he said.

Funding for club sports is another focus of Hopper and Engel's campaign.

"The people involved work really hard, and the money they receive is not enough for them to function," he said.

Hopper said he thinks going on-air is a good opportunity for the candidates.

"It is a great way for the students to get to know us," he said.

Engel said he never had been on the radio before.

"It was a new experience," he said.

At 6:30 tonight, the Wildcat 91.9 will present the show again with the other presidential candidates. The three pairs to be featured are Travis Lenkner/ Mary Bosco, Ali Karimi/Fidel Amos and Kyle Baker/ Brandon Kauffman.

Students who want a more formal atmosphere can tune in Sunday for a formal debate session.

Dungey said the average bill runs between $75-$120 for damage caused by potholes.

"It can go a lot higher than that," he said. "It really depends on what you tear up. You could be spending up to $500 just on parts."

Crystal Jefferson, sophomore in pre-dentistry, spent $55 Wednesday after a pothole caused damage to her tire.

"I woke up this morning and found out I had a flat tire," Jefferson said. "The mechanic said it was most likely caused by a pothole because there was a huge gash in it. I really just wish they could fix the potholes because they are impossible to avoid, and it is costing residents unnecessary expenses."

Another concern for Facilities has been crumbling curbs, Slover said, especially along Mid Campus Drive.

has been crumbling curbs, Slover said, especially along Mid Campus Drive.

"The cold weather pops them out, and the snow plows also hit them causing them to crumble," he said.

Funding has been set aside to repair the curbs this summer, Slover said.

Even though potholes can cause some jolting and jarring, Brian Gray, service adviser for Grays Westloop Service, said whether they can cause damage to vehicles depends on the size.

"Vehicles are made to withstand drops and are made to go over bumps," Gray said.

"It would have to be a pretty severe pothole." He said severe potholes could cause breaks or punctures in tires as well as damage to the front end alignment suspension.

Slover said Facilities will try to work as quickly as possible to fix the potholes.

"We know they're there and need to be fixed," he said.

"As soon as the elements are right, we'll get out there and fix them."

structural integrity of the buildings. She said the inspections are underway and any problems that are found will be corrected.

However, this doesn't reassure Lanning or her roommates.

"We do not understand how they can condemn two apartments in one complex, but not the whole complex," she said.

"Our concern is for our safety.

The sheet rock is starting to crack all around the apartment. It just keeps getting worse, and we feel like they are not concerned about the problem."

Brad Claussen, building official for the City of Manhattan, said that First Management is taking steps to correct the problem to the best of his knowledge.

"We have been in constant contact with them, and we know that they are planning to start work soon," Claussen said. "Their plans are to go through the entire 'H' complex and make any corrections that are necessary."

Claussen said condemnation of the complex is not an option now.

"I don't think we are near that point," he said.

"We vacated the apartments where there is immediate danger, and the company is taking the proper steps to fix the problem."

Lanning and her three roommates still occupy their apartment, as do Anderson and his roommates.

"We have no choice," Lanning said.

"We can't move because we don't have the finances to do so. It is a major distraction, though, to have to deal with the construction and the management on top of going to school full-time and having a part-time job. Nobody has the time to deal with it, and I really don't think we should have to."

Housing, Dining Services unsure of effect of governor's proposed budget numbers

By KRISTEN DYMAKES
Kansas State Collegian

It's too soon for the Department of Housing and Dining Services to know how it will be affected by Gov. Bill Graves' proposed state budget cuts.

Director of Housing and Dining Services Chuck Werring said even though the department can speculate, it is too hard to tell how it is going to be affected for sure.

"The university as a whole needs to see where the cuts will be made before we can see how it's going to affect us," Werring said.

Bob Burgess, administrative services associate director, said the department won't be directly affected by the budget cuts because the department doesn't receive state funding.

"Our funds come from student room and board fees,"

Burgess said, "so the proposed cuts don't really apply to us."

He said it is possible the cuts eventually could affect the department indirectly because of the two academic classrooms located in the Kramer and Derby academic resource centers.

"Those classrooms are deemed regular university classrooms,"

he said.

The computers in those classrooms originally were purchased and operated by the department, Burgess said, but Computing and Networking Services is in charge of upgrading the hardware.

"As far as upgrades to the hardware, it could be affected," he said, "but only in the technology classrooms."

Werring said the department will just have to wait and see what happens with the budget cuts.

"Right now, we're on hold," he said.

"We're just going to have to go ahead and do our business as usual."

Monkeying Around

2-man band One Sad Monkey offers audiences acoustic sound, humor

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

PHOTOS BY KAREN MIKOLS/Collegian
Tyler Lansdown, senior in theater, and Chance Mullen, junior in theater, with Mullen's guitar, Bernadette. The duo formed the band One Sad Monkey, which plays mainly acoustic music.

The name of the band, One Sad Monkey, is a complete lie.

Not only are the two members of the band not monkeys, but by weaving humor into their songs, the band tries to avoid sadness. That's all part of the ploy to make their style unexpected on stage, Chance Mullen, vocalist and guitarist, said.

"We posted a sheet on the theater call board for a band name and got many interesting responses, many of them vulgar," Mullen, junior in theater, said. "Then someone who had seen the post just suggested 'One Sad Monkey,' and that worked."

The duo One Sad Monkey is made up of Mullen and Tyler Lansdown, who also sings and plays guitar. The two have been playing together for over a year and began to take the act more seriously over the summer.

One Sad Monkey recently has been gaining popularity for the humor it weaves into the music. Lansdown, senior in theater, said that when people come to see them play, he just wants them to have a good time.

"I want people to say 'Man those guys were fun to see,' because we're really just trying to have fun with this," he said.

After a brief stint with an improv group that fell apart, Mullen said he and Lansdown kept working together, mixing comedy into the music. Mullen said when they began writing songs, they only did comedy, but now they mix more serious songs into their sets.

A sense of humor remains a driving force for the band. Even in serious songs they try to maintain a comedic edge, Mullen said. Having a variety to the songs they sing gives them more depth, Mullen said.

Of the 16-song repertoire of One Sad Monkey, Lansdown said about half are funny, and he said he hopes people appreciate both types.

"It can be kind of trite when you are just a funny band because people think that's all you can do," he said.

When the band began to care more about the quality of the music, they wrote a few more songs that weren't just meant to be funny, Mullen said.

Lansdown suggested a more obvious reason why they began doing serious songs.

"I've been wronged more times by women than any guy I know," he said.

When the two take the music more seriously, Kat Aguirre, a friend of the band members, said she enjoys the meaning the songs have.

"I personally love hearing what they play," said Aguirre, senior in theater and psychology. "Their funny stuff is good, but the serious stuff is what I really love. Every word that is said has definite meaning."

Mullen said he enjoys the balance of the two. Sometimes he said he's just in the mood to do dirty comedy.

That edgy sense of humor sometimes can be taken as offensive, Lansdown said. Lansdown said he tries to avoid people misinterpreting the point of the music because, while the band might sing about offensive ideas, it's all a joke.

"We want people to have fun at our shows, not get upset," Lansdown said. "One guy yelled at us as he walked out of our show, but it's all a joke."

Lansdown said it's unfortunate some people focus on the controversial aspects of the band and immediately think, that because of the lyrics, they are misogynistic jerks.

"I don't want people to think we're every day aholes and we hate women," he said. "I mean, I love my mother. She just hates my music."

The two take on separate responsibilities with the band that suit their respective personalities, Lansdown said. While both of them bring up musical ideas, Lansdown said it's Mullen who does most of the lyrical writing.

Lansdown has a tendency to be more vocal when onstage, Mullen said. Mullen said it doesn't bother him because Lansdown is good with an audience.

"I could try to compete but then it would be two guys competing for a laugh, which would be stupid," he said. "This works much better."

Relating to the audience is a strong point for One Sad Monkey, Aguirre said. They have an ability to relate to the audience and eliminate barriers between them and the audience, she said.

"They're not pretentious at all. They just have fun with the audience and there's no tension," she said. "They bring themselves to the level of the audience."

Mullen relates it to becoming friends with them.

"It's like we're all sitting on a couch together," he said.

WEB SITES TO WATCH

Campusdog

URL: www.campusdog.com

Campusdog has the potential to be an excellent site with a plethora of resources ... if students use it.

The site relies heavily on participation from students, which gives a personalized approach to each school (including K-State). Students are invited to become a member and submit local events and let everyone else know about area bars.

Aside from that, students can submit a problem to be answered by advice columnists, submit stories about fun things that have happened to them, and pictures of themselves and your friends.

M.C. Hawking's Crib

URL: www.mchawking.com

The premise of MC Hawking's Crib is that the brilliant Stephen Hawking has a secret life as a gangsta rapper.

For anyone unfamiliar with Hawking, he is a highly regarded scientist and genius who is paraplegic and requires a computerized voice to talk. The very idea of Hawking rapping is hilarious and somewhat offensive.

The site is complete with MP3s of the rapper's work, pictures of him with high profile stars, lyrics to the obscenity-filled rhymes and a flash video for "The Mighty Mighty Stephen Hawking."

you can, you're probably going to come out on top."

It was Kansas, though, that made the most layups, which partially was due to the team's size and ability to run the floor.

Eventually, the Cats just wore down, Wooldridge said.

er on the floor. I think he was confident in himself and everybody was, too, so we wanted to get him the ball."

Buchanan first got the Cats on the board with a spinning jumpshot over the extended hand of KU forward Kenny Gregory.

From there, things started to feel right, Buchanan said.

"I had confidence coming into this game — every game I have confidence. And shots were falling, so I just took advantage of them," he said.

"They were just coming to me — it was in the offense. I hit my first one and I felt comfortable, so I just kept on going with it."

That he did.

Buchanan followed with a jumper from the corner at the 17:12 mark to give K-State its first lead of the game at 4-3, and just over three minutes later, he drilled a three-pointer that capped a 7-0 Cat run, which was extended to 9-0 on a shot by guard

"I thought fatigue got to us. They wore us down a little bit," he said. "We tried to do a little bit different defense scheme as we were getting hurt inside, but it looked like everybody was hurting us as this half went on."

When K-State did slow down the Jayhawk offense and close to within six points, KU guard Kenny Gregory stepped up and hit a three-point shot, an especially frustrating play for K-State.

Richie Terry.

Junior forward Travis Reynolds could see Buchanan was on the verge of playing one of his better games of the season.

"The first half he really carried us, knocking some shots down, so I think he came prepared to play tonight," Reynolds said of his former high school teammate.

"When you knock the first shot down, that's really a confidence boost. When he hit that shot, you could see he had a different swagger to him. He was real confident about what he was doing."

Confident — even against the likes of Gregory. The KU senior, who recently was named to the Wooden Award Midseason Top 30 list, boasts a 41-inch vertical leap.

"I'm not intimidated by nobody," Buchanan said.

Gregory, at 6-feet, 5-inches, even said it was difficult to guard a taller player with such long arms and athletic ability off the dribble.

"He's very tall and versatile and it's hard to contest his shot — he's 6'7" or 6'8" — so it causes matchup

"When Gregory hits a three, that's really frustrating because he can barely hit a free throw," Reid said.

Nevertheless, from that point on, K-State simply couldn't muster another comeback. But, Wooldridge said, not many teams could have closed the gap, let alone the bottom team in the Big 12.

"I think it's very difficult if your season is going well. I think it's even more difficult if your season's not going well," Wooldridge said.

Still, despite the loss, there were positives to take out of the game.

"I think there was a lot of improvement from when we first started," Reid said. "We were more confident. We weren't nervous with the ball. We were getting the job done the way we wanted to. We weren't letting them speed us up."

"If we could have hit more shots and got more layups, I think we would have won."

"I thought he got off to a quick start for them early, gave him a little confidence, and I think that continued to help him throughout the entire game," Williams said.

Wooldridge said it was good to see Buchanan's progress become evident on the floor, especially on the offensive end.

"There comes a point in time when players have to take it upon themselves to find ways to be more aggressive within the system you're playing," Wooldridge said. "And I think tonight Quentin pretty much threw caution to the wind and tried to make some plays out there, which is good."

"I think he's taken some steps in the right direction."

5,500 were printed, and those are disappearing quickly — the fact that a fourth-string quarterback is the author might surprise some. It certainly did to Hudson, especially since Burton had told very few people on the team that he was working on the book.

"I took the book to my quarterback coach Ron Hudson's house," Burton said, "and he said, 'Wow, how did he get so lucky to get on the cover of the book?'"

And his wife says, "Because he wrote it, Ron."

After that initial shock wore off, though, Hudson appreciated what Burton had done.

"He came in, and he signed it and he gave it to me and thanked me, thanked me for everything I'd done for him," Hudson said, "and

"Great Day To Be A Wildcat: Inside the Life of a Kansas State Football Player" is available at Vamey's Bookstore, It's Greek To Me and Dillons for $14.95.

I said, 'I should be thanking you because he helped me more than I helped him because he was such a positive influence on every body.'"

No. 24 Baylor defeats K-State despite Wildcats' 1st half lead

The Associated Press.

WACO, Texas — Nicole Ohlde led the Wildcats with 15 points and six rebounds, but her team couldn't hold on to a halftime lead as No. 24 Baylor defeated K-State 74-57 on Wednesday night.

Baylor's Danielle Crockrom scored 29 points, and Monica Arnold recorded her sixth double-double.

Arnold finished with 14 points and 13 rebounds for Baylor (20-7, 9-7 Big 12), which scored 25 points off of K-State turnovers.

K-State (12-15, 2-14) led 33-30 at halftime as it shot 50 percent to Baylor's 31 percent. The Wildcats hit 6-of-9 three-point attempts in the first half.

The Bears turned it around in the second half, hitting 49 percent of its field-goal attempts while keeping K-State to 39 percent, including only 2-of-7 from three-point range.

Recreational Services' Office Located in Peters Recreation Complex

As the weather gets nicer, more time will be spent outside. The Outdoor Rental Center at the Recreation Complex provides equipment to help you spend an entire weekend enjoying the great outdoors. The entrance to the Outdoor Rental Center is located between the outdoor handball courts & tennis courts. Anyone with a valid K-State ID or facility use card is eligible to rent equipment. "It is very easy to rent from us. All it takes is a phone call," said Steve Martini, Associate Director of Programs at Recreational Services. "We are open seven days a week for convenience, and you can reserve equipment two weeks in advance."

A wide variety of items is available from Outdoor Rental to meet camping and canoeing needs, ranging from canoes to life vests, tents to sleeping bags, lanterns and ice chests. Backpacks and frames are also available for hiking and biking. Rental rates vary from $1-$15 per day. "Compared to other schools in the Big Twelve, our rates are actually less," said Martini. "If you aren't going camping a lot and just want to go out occasionally, you can avoid the hassle and added cost of buying your own equipment by renting ours." Another great thing about renting rather than buying is the fact that very few college students have a place to store a canoe for six months out of the year. That isn't a problem for the Rec. "Canoes and trailers take up a lot of space, but by renting them, people don't have to worry about finding room for their equipment," said Martini.

The Outdoor Rental Center is open Sunday-Friday, 4-6 PM and Saturday, 11 AM-1 PM. For a complete list of items, visit the Rec Services web site at www.recservices.ksu.edu or call Outdoor Rental at 532-6894.

My Favorite Workout

Coming to the Rec has been a part of Euston Davis's schedule for the past four years. "I like coming to the Rec because I get a great workout, and I don't have to pay any extra fees to join," said Davis. Davis, a senior in Business, is a native of Hampton, Virginia. After completing his term in the army, Davis decided to stay around Manhattan to attend school. He usually comes to the Rec alone and enjoys lifting weights. Davis keeps coming to the Rec in order to stay in shape. "More people need to be interested in working out," said Davis. "It is a great way to stay in shape and keep from gaining weight." Davis attacks his workouts in much the same way that he approaches life. "I just always try to do the best I can in everything."

Working It Out

Swimming, cycling, jogging, skiing, aerobic dancing, walking or any of dozens of other activities can help your heart. They all cause you to feel warm, perspire and breathe heavily without being out of breath and without feeling any burning sensation in your muscles. Whether it is a structured exercise program or just part of your daily routine, all exercise adds up to a healthier heart. Here are some tips for exercising success:

- If you have been sedentary for a long time, are overweight, have a high risk of coronary heart disease or some other chronic health problems, see your doctor for a medical evaluation before beginning a physical activity program.
- Choose activities that are fun, not exhausting.
- Add variety. Try not to rely too much on one activity, but develop a repertoire of several that you can enjoy. That way, exercise will never seem boring or routine.
- Wear comfortable, properly fitted footwear and comfortable, loose-fitting clothing that is appropriate for the weather and the activity.
- Find a convenient time and place to do activities. Try to make it a habit, but be flexible. If you miss an exercise opportunity, work activity into your day another way.
- Use music to keep you entertained.
- Surround yourself with supportive people.
- Share your activity time with others. Make a date with a family member, friend or co-worker. Be an active role model for your children.
- Don't overdo it. Do low- to moderate-level activities, especially at first. You can slowly increase the duration and intensity of your activities as you become more fit. Over time, work up to exercising three or four times per week for 30-60 minutes.
- Keep a record of your activities. Reward yourself at special milestones. Nothing motivates like success!

One could say family tradition is responsible for Wayne Becker wanting to work at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Becker's two older brothers both worked for Rec Services while they were in school, as well. Becker spends the majority of his time working at the Outdoor Rental Center, but also finds himself working at the service desk when he is needed. "I really wanted to work at the Rec because my brothers both did," said Becker. "I was especially hoping for the Outdoor Rental job because I really enjoy camping and the outdoors." Becker has worked at the Rec the entire five years he has been going to school at K-State. During that time, he has enjoyed the opportunity to work with a lot of different people. "The people here are so nice to work with," said Becker. "The bosses are great, too. Plus you get to meet lots of people." Becker, a fifth year senior in Interior Architecture, will graduate in May of this year. He is currently interviewing with various companies, but would ideally like to end up in Portland, Oregon.

Laura Fredrickson has worked at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex since August 2000. However, in the short time she has been here, she has found many reasons to enjoy her job as an Assistant Building Supervisor. "The hours work well with my schedule," said Fredrickson. "Plus there are a lot of possible hours to work. Fredrickson, a sophomore in Public Relations from Phillipsburg, KS, also enjoys being around lots of different people. "I really like working with other students and being in such a fun, friendly atmosphere," said Fredrickson. Working at the service desk has also taught her some important lessons in life. "I have learned how to interact with a variety of people and to always maintain a positive attitude," said Fredrickson. Fredrickson will graduate in May 2003 and hopes to find a job with a corporate public relations firm in a large city outside of Kansas.

Fitness Facts

The Importance of a Warm Up
Many people mix up warm-up and stretching, but in fact, they are totally different. The only thing they have in common is that they are done before the workload. Warm-up exercise is not vigorous, but warms you up (e.g. walking, cycling in a slow phase.) A proper warm-up will prevent and reduce strains and muscle pulls, tears and soreness. And remember, no more than 10 minutes should elapse between the completion of warm-up and performing your exercise. After warm-up exercise, you should do some stretching before you really do your workload.

The Importance of a Cool Down
After you've been doing vigorous exercise, you should do some cool-down before you stop. Cool-down exercises are like those warm-up exercises. The only difference is that one is done before the workload and the other is after. A proper cool-down will continue to lower the heart rate and will also help to prevent excessive pooling of the blood in the lower extremities, reduce muscle soreness, and promote faster removal of metabolic wastes. You know you're in good shape if within 5 minutes of completing a vigorous workout your heart rate falls to or below 100 beats per minute.

Nutrition Notes

Happy St Patrick's Day – Celebrate Green!

Green on your menu may be your key to healthful eating and disease prevention. Dark green vegetables like spinach, kale, turnip & mustard greens, broccoli, asparagus and others are rich in phytochemicals – a possible key to disease prevention. Phytochemicals are the full array of chemicals found naturally in plants. These chemicals may explain why people with high intakes of plant foods have lower incidence of disease. Until researchers know the complete answer, start eating the green. Enjoy greens raw in salads or for snacks. Try cooked veggies plain, in casseroles, or on pasta. And even though they're not green, yellow and orange fruits and veggies may provide the same health benefit. And dark green veggies are loaded with vitamins & minerals – something we need every day. So celebrate St Patrick's Day by eating the green!

SGA election voting online only

By JESSICA LEDUC
Kansas State Collegian

Students don't have to get out of the house to vote in the Student Governing Association elections. Monday's elections are completely online.

For the first time ever there won't be any voting booths set up anywhere on campus.

"The last few years we have been moving toward that direction," said Ted Conrad, senior in finance and a member of the elections committee. "This will provide students a more convenient way to vote. They won't be tied down with coming to the Union to vote."

The online polls will operate 24 hours a day. They open at 7 a.m. Monday and close at 5 p.m. Wednesday. Students can log on to KATS from any computer to vote, or they can use the computer in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Elections Chair Dustin Petrik said that once students have logged on to KATS, they will be given a random voter registration number that will link them to a ballot for their particular college.

Students will only be able to vote one time.

Last year, the campus saw an 18-percent voter turnout, but Petrik said he did not think the turnout would be as high for this election.

"Last year's turnout was higher than past years because we had a lot of candidates running and a lot of controversial issues, and people wanted to get involved," Petrik said.

Petrik said that in the past, the highest voter turnout was generally on the Wednesday of elections because of the high number of classes offered on campus that day.

"That has been the trend in the past," Petrik said. "But, since it's all online, people don't have to be on campus to vote."

Conrad said one of the reasons the decision to go totally online was made was because of the election vendor.

"The vendor we chose this year is capable of doing write-ins, and last year that wasn't possible," Conrad said.

Last year, students wanting to vote for a write-in candidate had to fill out the entire ballot by hand.

On the on-line ballot this year, there will be a blank space available to type in a write-in candidate's name. There will be a blank space available for each open position in SGA. If no one is running for a position, it will have to be filled by a write-in candidate.

"In Vet Med and the Graduate Student Senate, no one has filed, so they will definitely be filled by write-ins," Petrik said.

With any election, human error is a possibility when it comes to counting the votes, but Conrad said this should not be much of a problem this year.

"I think it will only help out on that situation," Conrad said. "If we were going through 3,000 ballots by hand, there would probably be errors, but the vendor will send us the totals, and there shouldn't be any errors."

Conrad said he is expecting everything to run smoothly during the voting process — both on campus and with the vendor.

"We've been testing it,"

Conrad said.

"We're pretty confident that things on their end will run OK, and on our end, all people will have to do is log on to KATS."

Transportation plans largely supported by presidential hopefuls

By AMY MORGAN
Kansas State Collegian

K-State student body presidential and vice presidential candidates have been hitting the campaign trail hard in attempts to persuade K-State students they will be the right choice for the job.

Each candidate has a separate platform, slogan and opinion of what is important to them and the campus. One topic many K-State students are concerned with is the topic of transportation and how each pair of candidates stands on the issue.

The transportation plan proposed by the city of Manhattan is a citywide transit system that would be available to the citizens of Manhattan as well as K-State students and would run in a two-route

Union asks for emergency aid from Senate

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Student Senate introduced a bill that would make a one-time allocation of $85,000 to the K-State Student Union to be used to meet the inflating rates of energy costs.

"The Union has requested the emergency funding from the Privilege Fee Committee," Ryan Walker, privilege fee chair, said. "They are in serious need for the additional funding, and they have met the criteria of the Debt Reduction and Emergency Allocation Account guidelines."

Revenue now funds 90 percent of the Union, and the other 10 percent is from student fees.

"They are lacking in the 90 percent right now," Walker said. "The budget is off in that area because of a decrease in revenue. That, combined with high energy cost, leaves them in a bind."

To combat the rising cost, the Union has reduced its hours on various businesses in the facility.

Among the most significant cutbacks are the closing of the K-State Union Bookstore on Saturdays, the closing of the Copy Center on Saturdays and Sundays, the closing of the Cat's Den on Sundays and reduced hours for the Union Food Court.

"These are significant changes," Walker said. "This is the first time the Bookstore has closed their doors on Saturday since they opened."

Walker said Union officials also have initiated a hiring freeze for all full- and part-time positions and reduced their food court staff by five full-time employees.

"Bernard Pitts and other officials in the Union are doing all they can to reduce the high expenses," Walker said. "We really need to look at what can be done to help this situation."

Senate also introduced a resolution supporting implementation of advising responsibilities. This replaces an earlier introduced resolution titled Advising Bill of Rights that outlined advising responsibilities. The previous resolution would give the colleges and departments common criteria by which to evaluate advisers.

"There are a few changes," Student Body President Jake Worcester said. "We received suggestions from Divorced with grown-up children, Barbara Hilpman was looking for a new purpose in her life.

An article about Peace Corps experience caught her attention and inspired her to set out on a journey to Europe.

"I decided that I could help somebody who is in a worse shape than me," Hilpman said.

Hilpman is temporarily a Peace Corps recruiter at K-State's Office of International Programs. In fact, Hilpman said she is thinking about applying again.

At age 61, she applied for the Peace Corps program and ended up as a business adviser in Poland.

Hilpman was assigned to a very small community in the town of Losice. She taught Polish entrepreneurs basic business skills and explained Western advertising practices.

"It was exciting to see private business owners become successful," Hilpman said.

She arrived in Poland in 1990 — at the time when the post-communist country was going through the painful period of transition from state-controlled economy to a free-market economy.

Western companies were just coming in, Hilpman said.

Establishing business contacts with Pepsi Foods International was on the list of her ventures. The company was constructing a potato chip factory in the suburbs of Warsaw. Obviously, they needed the raw material — potatoes.

Besides cultivating the spirit of entrepreneurship, Hilpman had to immerse herself in another culture.

Once you travel, you discover that people can be different, yet there are a lot of similarities, Hilpman said.

During her stay in Poland, she faced the task of teaching English with hardly any knowledge of the Polish language.

Showcasing the best of K-State to state legislators, Cats in the Capitol displayed prime university aspects in Topeka on Thursday, said Matt Walters, Student Senate governmental relations chair.

"Cats in the Capitol gave us an opportunity to show off students, faculty, research and educational programs," Walters said. "It allowed legislators to know what we're really doing in Manhattan from a student standpoint."

The first-floor rotunda and wings of the Statehouse were transformed into a parade of purple as more than 40 students and faculty attended the promotional event, Walters said.

"Our underlining message was to share the accomplishments of organizations and university groups," Walters said. "It was not a lobby day. Our intent was to say, 'Hey, we're K-State, and we're proud to wear purple.'"

Although the event originally began as a part of a formal lobby effort in the early 1990s, it has turned into a focus on legislative appreciation, said Jackie McClaskey, assistant dean of the College of Agriculture.

"Cats in the Capitol has become a tradition to serve the state in a direct student-initiated, hands-on approach," she said. "Over the years, it has grown to include more and more colleges and organizations."

The event expanded to represent a larger range of K-State colleges and groups, Walters said. Booths from different colleges displayed a variety of K-State programs and events.

Coordinating the event involved five different organizations. The Student Governing Association, College of Agriculture, KSU Alumni Association, Office of the President and K-State Research and Extension cooperated to organize the event.

"Due to the size, it takes all of these groups to make the day work as effectively as it does," McClaskey said. Walters said payoffs to these efforts came from the attention and involvement of senators, representatives, governor's cabinet members and additional Statehouse staff.

"Everyone remembered the event and looked forward to it," Walters said. "Many couldn't wait for the ice cream, meats, cheeses, cookies and other food products from the College of Agriculture. Nonetheless, I think they appreciated seeing students involved."

Students took turns working the booths and mingling with the distinguished guests, Kristen Spicer, College of Agriculture coordinator, said.

"Students were on-hand to answer questions and hand out information," Spicer said. "We saw quite a few people go through, and they didn't leave much food, so they must have enjoyed it."

Rising to a higher political level, Spicer said students were able to network the legislators to the university.

"Students were eager to get involved with state politics," Walters said. "There was a great interest as students saw the importance to represent our school to the legislators."

Spicer said portraying a positive purple image to the elected officials established a connection and common interest in K-State.

"It's good to make sure they know we appreciate what they do for us," she said. "It is our way to contribute back to those who show us support."

Question of the week

Q: I have been hearing a lot about the Konza Prairie Biological Station since it is going to be featured on PBS. Where can I find out some information on the prairie and how can I visit or volunteer there?

A: Information on the Konza Prairie is available at www2.educ.ksu.edu/Projects/konza/web/konza.html. Here you can find the history of the prairie, types of habitats and animals on the prairie and other general information on the prairie. In order to find out how to volunteer or get involved with the prairie, contact the Konza Prairie Office at 587-0441.

Former athlete arrested on 3 counts Wednesday

Former K-State basketball player Galen Morrison was arrested at 12:25 a.m. Wednesday for battery, obstruction of the legal process and disorderly conduct. The arrest was made at 115 Moro St., according to the Riley County Police Department.

Morrison began his career last season as the team's leading scorer, posting 11.9 points per game. After playing just one regular-season game this year, the 6-foot shooting guard elected to leave the men's team. Morrison scored 10 points and drilled 3 of 8 from downtown in the Wildcats' 76-66 loss to Wichita State.

The Omaha, Neb., native came to K-State last season after two years at Iowa Western CC. Morrison missed the last six games of the 1999-00 campaign after then-head coach Tom Asbury suspended him for disciplinary reasons, and subsequently, he was dismissed from the team. Morrison then was reinstated by Jim Wooldridge following the first-year head coach's hiring in March.

Arrest made in burglary of K-State Post Office

John South, freshman in computer engineering, was arrested early Thursday morning in connection with the burglary of the K-State Post Office.

K-State Police Capt. Robert Mellgren said the police received a tip, and a search warrant was conducted in South's residence hall room, Marlatt 228, at about 1 a.m. South was arrested at about 2 a.m. for the Feb. 22 theft of the post office's money order machine and criminal destruction of property.

Mellgren said a window was broken, and there was minor destruction. The estimated loss is $100.

The burglary is a federal offense, Mellgren said. A court hearing will be conducted with the county attorney and possibly the federal attorney. South is being held at Riley County Jail.

Mellgren said a motive for the burglary is unclear. He said South might have intended to use the machine to produce money orders.

The arrest was made without incident, Mellgren said. "We're just happy we were able to get it resolved," he said.

Presidential candidates debate today in Union

Candidates for student body president and vice president will face off at noon today in the Union Courtyard during a debate sponsored by Union Program Council.

"We want the students to come out and hear the candidates' issues," said Amy Wood, chairwoman of the UPC Issues and Ideas Committee. "This will be a great opportunity for them to become educated before they vote."

Each team will present a short opening statement followed by a question-answer period of prepared questions.

"We are trying to gear the questions around topics that each of the candidates have an interest in," Wood said. "We want to show the students the varying opinions and let them make their decisions."

Following the formal format will be a period for audience members to ask questions.

"It is open to all students to ask questions about issues they are concerned about," she said.

Wood said several campus organizations are sending a representative to ask questions that are prevalent to their group.

"They want to see how the candidate feels about specific issues that are important to them and their organization," she said. "It is going to be a great opportunity."

Students can also listen to KSDB-FM 91.9 at 9 p.m. Sunday to listen to an on-air debate with all five pairs of the candidates.

Student body presidential and vice-presidential candidates Rick Wooten (right) and Aaron Shea donated all of their campaign funds to charity. Their central issue is the need for reform of the entire election process at K-State.

Duo runs for 3rd time

By CRISTINA JANNEY
Kansas State Collegian

Rick Wooten and Aaron Shea have been buddies most of their college careers.

The duo is making a third attempt at being elected student body president and vice president. Wooten, senior in radio and television, and Shea, senior in secondary education, joked about their lives after college. Both are 22.

Wooten said he was contemplating herding goats, but he didn't really mean it.

"I don't want to leave Manhattan," he said.

Wooten works at the Aggie Lounge where he is a bartender and manager.

Wooten plays intramural basketball in his spare time. He said if he could do anything to improve K-State, he would put more books in the library.

"It is pretty bad when you can get things from Sterling, Kan., and not from Kansas State University," he said.

He said he was also concerned classes may be canceled and people delayed in graduation if the governor's budget is approved.

Wooten is originally from outside of Topeka and graduated from Shawnee Heights High School.

Shea is from Missoula, Mont., but moved to Manhattan with his family eight years ago. He graduated from Manhattan High School.

If he could do anything to change Manhattan, he said he would improve housing. A block away from his apartment, he said there is a building that has been deemed unfit to enter.

Shea said he would also encourage people to walk. He said he did not see a transportation problem in Manhattan.

People could car pool, and he said he favored offering permits that would just be used for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Wooten said he disagreed about the Rec Complex parking. He said he thought veterinary medicine students would use the parking.

Shea works during basketball games at Bramlage Coliseum and football games at KSU Stadium.

"I get paid money for watching sports," he said.

Shea plays club soccer and said he hoped to coach soccer someday. He said he liked children and wanted to be a teacher.

"I think it is important," Shea said. "I had some good teachers growing up, and I wanted to emulate them."

One of those teachers was Mr. Donnelly, a science and math teacher he had in middle school while he lived in Ohio.

"He made learning fun. He made you want to be at school," Shea said. "He wanted you to learn — not just pass."

Shea has a dual major in history, which is what he hopes to teach.

"Everything that happens now is related to what has come before. It's all cause and effect," he said.

Candidates address housing

By ERICA COURTRIGHT
Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission has not yet decided how to handle the issue of mandatory rental inspections, but the five student body presidential candidates are in consensus on how they think the commission should act.

All five presidential candidates and their running mates said they support mandatory rental inspections.

"It's high time we have some sort of program to ensure safe housing for students," presidential candidate Travis Lenkner said. "We have students living in apartments and houses that aren't fit to be inhabited. They don't meet fire codes, and they're not safe. The only way to improve these conditions is with mandatory inspections."

Presidential candidate Ali Karimi said with his personal experiences, he supports mandatory inspections 100 percent.

"The house I lived in, before this one, was condemned," Karimi said. "Inspections are important because there's a lot about regulations that the average person wouldn't know."

Student Senate brought the issue of rental housing to the forefront last fall when its members approved a resolution encouraging the city to require inspections of all rental properties in the city. Mayor Karen McCulloh appointed a committee at that time to investigate the issue.

On Feb. 13, that committee recommended the commission implement an inspection program. After opening the topic for public comment, the commission requested that the city staff investigate the option of requiring registration of rental properties rather than inspections.

The commission's final decision on the subject might not come until after the City Commission election this spring.

In the mean time, presidential candidate Ben Hopper said he and his running mate, Eric Engel, would like to see student leaders continue to encourage mandatory inspections.

"I like the work that's been done by student government so far," he said.

"I think the research that's been done by the current administration is good. We want to continue working to improve the quality of rental housing."

Kyle Barker, presidential candidate, said guaranteeing quality rental housing for students is important.

"We think it would help promote safety for students to implement an inspection program," Barker said.

"We believe students deserve safe housing. We think for as much as students give to the community, the community should ensure the students have safe housing."

Aaron Shea, who is running for vice president with presidential candidate Rick Wooten, agreed that the community owes K-State students safe rental housing.

"We believe it's a shame students have to live in rundown houses," Shea said. "This town depends on student revenue, yet students are living in dilapidated housing. It shouldn't be that way."

Colleges set several Telefund records

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

received 464 pledges and $22,632. This gave the college a four-day total of $168,330.

"We are very pleased to have made this mark, especially with another day still remaining," said Kevin Donnelly, Assistant Dean for College of Agriculture. "We were pretty excited about the new record, but we were also pretty confident that we would make it," he said.

Donnelly said the college was prepared for Telefund. Tuesday night, the college was short participants because of the winter weather.

"Except for Tuesday, we have had 43 participants every night, and there has been an increase of callers this year," Donnelly said.

Bonnie Cowles, sophomore in agriculture journalism, worked for Telefund and the college three nights this week.

"I have enjoyed it," she said. "It's been a good experience and alumni donated about $6,000 during the time I have worked."

The College of Human Ecology is $1,100 short of a new record. Its total so far is $112,570 with 2,127 pledges.

The College of Architecture, Planning and Design will begin Telefund Sunday.

They plan on breaking their previous record of $54,000 from last year.

"We hope to set a new record like the other colleges have," assistant dean Diane Potts said.

Potts said it is the smallest college with the least amount of alumni on campus.

"We have still had an overwhelming amount of student volunteers, and we hope to fill more than 40 phones," she said.

Eating disorder sufferers find help on Web

Eating disorders are very serious problems. According to the Web site edreferral.com/for_the_media.htm, 10 percent of females in the United States, numbering up to 10 million, and one million males are struggling with eating disorders.

The three main types of eating disorders are anorexia nervosa, bulimia nervosa and the binge eating disorder. However, another eating disorder often overlooked is compulsive overeating.

On the Internet, there are several Web sites that offer advice for helping yourself or someone you know who has an eating disorder. One of the sites is caringonline.com, which offers personal stories and helps establish a support system with message boards, pen pals and a search link that has links to more than 100 other eating disorder sites.

Another Web site is mirror-mirror.org/gethelp.htm. This helps individuals realize the different options they have with therapy, medications and nutritional counseling.

Lafayette Health Center has been doing a wonderful job promoting information on eating disorders. They have been providing students with resources not only in their building, but also extending themselves to the K-State Student Union.

If you or someone you know has an eating disorder, the time is now to get help.

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics relevant to the publication.

This is for all the ignorant people that are trashing "Monkey Boy" — it's not supposed to be funny everyday. It's not for your entertainment.

All right! The Rec Center won't be affected by budget cuts. Sure, my engineering classes will double in size and my teachers will become less and less experienced, but at least I'll be able to watch "Sports Center" while I'm on the Stairmaster.

Welcome to the 2001 Kansas State popularity contest.

If men's basketball games were 30 minutes instead of 40, we would have one hell of a record.

To the Big 12 refs last night: Your proctologist called me. He found your head.

This is in regards to Ali and Fidel's 10 points in Wednesday's paper. I suggest that you read the rules and regs to parking before you set them and bash them. What kind of leaders are you going to be if you don't even know what you are talking about?

Last year 50-23 half-time score, this year 31-29 half-time score. Thanks, Coach Wooldridge.

I remember when the student body president candidates had real issues for their platform.

For a school known for its engineering department, don't tell me we don't know how to make proper roads that can withstand the weather.

Thanks Collegian — Seattle earthquake page three. Nice.

Lone Ranger: Damn, aren't those cheerleaders fine? YEEE HAAWWWW!

Tonto: Uh.
Lone Ranger: Oh c'mon buddy, what's the matter? You should be able to appreciate... Oh my God and all that's holy, did you see that girl? I don't think she has a complete spine! YEEE HAAWWWW!

Tonto: Kemo sabe.
Lone Ranger: Exactly! You sure said it all. Man, isn't this great? We're living it up! Now this is America. It's so great to be here, me and you, together. United.
Tonto: Ugh.

Lone Ranger: Amen. ... I love President Bush, too. Thank God we live in a true democracy... Hey, I'm gonna go get a pickle. You don't want anything do you? I didn't think so. See ya. (Meanwhile, Tonto is looking around the gymnasium at all the students standing and tomahawk-chopping while a butchered version of a sacred song beats through some cheap trumpets. Little kids with face paint on stroll by. The crowd is noisy).

Lone Ranger: Hey! I'm back. Man, I'm ready to see these Indians put a whipping on those damned Redskins!!

Tonto: (quiet)

Lone Ranger: Hey! What's the matter? You're not pulling that crap about being offended again, are you? I mean, I know you have your reservations, but what else do you want?

Tonto: Well, it just disturbs me that in a country that prides itself on being a democracy that inherently requires equality to truly function, there are such blatant manifestations of institutionalized racism in our educational system.

Lone Ranger: Now, now, you know that ain't really true. You don't mean that! This is an equal nation. That's not racism. Hell, the KKK is racist. Having an Indian as a mascot isn't racist at all. Can't you see, Tonto, that this is honoring your culture?

Tonto: How is it honoring? This image is not representative of me. Those symbols are some kind of generic Pan-Indian idea that you have as being right. I mean, look at that nose! If Native-Americans truly were being honored, why is the mascot the only way the high school tries to show this?

Why are there no native speakers coming to present here? Why are all these people confused about the present realities of Native Americans in this country, and assume that Native Americans either are bloodthirsty savages noble savages, or vanishing redmen? Why are nearly all the other mascots in the state animals?

And the Redskin. Now that's like an all-white high school, using the "N" word as their mascot, with an obscene caricature of an African-American as the logo. Of course, then the crowd would have to be in blackface.

Lone Ranger: Well, hell, Tonto, now there might be something about the Redskins that I could maybe see as possibly maybe being a little teeny bit offensive to some overly proud people. But the Manhattan High School Indians? Hell, did you know that the mascot came about because there used to be a great coach here, who was an Indian. Just like you. Get it? Callin' ourselves the Indians is just our way of honoring him and all the Indians in the country.

Tonto: Why isn't the team named after him, then? Why isn't his face the mascot? It seems to me that many European-American coaches were influential in many football programs across the country, and yet there aren't any all-minority teams having the "Crackers" as their mascot, or "Whitey." Or, for that matter, the "Jews."

Lone Ranger: I can't believe that you can't see we're honoring you! Listen to that music! And that tomahawk chop thing! That's great! I mean, it's almost like I was one of you, chopping somebody's head off! Hey, you wanna know something?

Tonto: What?

Lone Ranger (leaning close): I'm part Indian.

Tonto: Uh-huh.

Lone Ranger: No, really. My grandma was the Cherokee Maiden. That makes me half. And it doesn't bother me at all! So it shouldn't bother you.

Tonto: Can you speak Cherokee?

Lone Ranger: Tatanka, doy?

Tonto: How long did you live on the rez?

Lone Ranger: Does that mean reservation?

Tonto: Exactly. That's my point. You think you can sit there and claim to be representative of Native people when you have no idea of what a cultural Native-American is, nor what constitutes such an individual's reality. So don't give me that crap.

Lone Ranger: You know, you're starting to get on my nerves!

Tonto: I'm outta here. I think I'm going to round up some warriors and start me a little scalpin' party here after which I'll get on my horse, grab my headdress, climb some mesa and send up some smoke signals to the Great Spirit.

Lone Ranger: Was that sarcasm?

(He pulls out his gun and shoots Tonto in the back. Tonto falls over and dies).

Lone Ranger: Hey, I need a real Indian. Do any of you all wanna be an Indian?

(He is quickly surrounded by eager, shouting faces. "I do, I do..." He finally picks out a young guy with a dark complexion who promptly puts on Tonto's regalia).

European-American: Hey, don't I get a headdress?

Lone Ranger: Shut up! I thought you were gonna be a good Indian.

European-American: Oh yeah, sorry. Ugh!

Lone Ranger: Now that's more like it!

European-American: Kemo Sabe.

Lone Ranger: You know, Tonto, I'm sure glad that we're here together. United. I'm so glad we live in an equal country. You don't want a pickle do you? Didn't think so. Now, this mascot here, it doesn't offend you, does it? You can see that it's a real accurate way of seeing a bloodthirsty savage that is at one with nature, but really doesn't exist anymore, right?

European-American: Ugh!

Lone Ranger: You said it, Tonto. You sure said it all.

Wooten, Shea propose change in election process

Fellow students. Let's not fool ourselves. Those who ultimately will prevail at the conclusion of this funny little formality we call an election was determined by the few many months ago.

T-shirts have been printed, banners fly in the wind and our local Wal-Mart once again has run out of sidewalk chalk. All of these things are done to help persuade you to vote for one person over another. Humorous to say the least.

We don't believe good leaders are chosen through these means. Any cumulative financial effort of more than the cost of a Digital Underground concert ticket simply is a waste. It is for this reason that we continue to stick by our pledge to donate any money received for our campaign to charitable groups such as the Women's Crisis Center, to which we did the same last year.

Our central issue is the need for reform of the entire election process at K-State. No longer should candidates pressure friends for funds in exchange for a Coca-Cola and a smile. No longer should it seem that you have to be an Alpha Delta Pi to be student body vice president. And no longer should Greeks be represented in our Student Senate in the similar proportion that they are in Athens. Please help us in inserting the slightest sliver of common sense for the common good into the Student Governing Association.

We are not members of the oligarchy that rules over SGA in a manner that should be investigated by Scully and Mulder. However, we still would like to take this opportunity to inform you of our cultural influences to gain a better perspective on what kind of leaders we would be.

Candidates get 'normal' on 91.9

By JAMIE BARRETT
Kansas State Collegian

Most presidential candidate interviews do not contain questions about favorite flavors of Jolly Ranchers or whether the candidate has ever been in a fight.

Phil Green, senior in political science, and Dan Neises, senior in microbiology, were not looking to conduct normal interviews Thursday night during the show "Get to Know Your Candidates," on KSDB-FM 91.9.

"We want people to know who is cool," Neises said. "In high school, you voted for who was the cool kid. Here, we don't know who is cool or not, so we want people to get to know the candidates outside of their platform."

Green and Neises conducted interviews with the student body presidential and vice presidential candidates Travis Lenkner/Mary Bosco, Kyle Barker/Brandon Kauffman and Ali Karimi, Karimi's running mate, Fidel Amos, was absent from the event

Each set of candidates went on the air for 30 minutes, answering questions from callers and during a "lightning round."

Lenkner, presidential candidate, and Bosco, vice presidential candidate, were the first on the air.

"I think this is a good break from the serious," Lenkner said. "The voters need to know that we are normal, too."

Lenkner and Bosco answered questions ranging from what their favorite movie was to what students should expect out of their "Expect more" campaign.

"We want people to expect that we are going to work hard all the way through," Lenkner said. "There is going to be no time when we slack off. We want students to expect that we will serve them better than ever before."

Karimi, presidential candidate, spoke with Neises and Green about conditions of Manhattan roads and whether he could yodel, among other various questions.

Karimi said one of the main issues on the Karimi/Amos ticket is the placement of clocks in all classrooms.

"Imagine there is a classroom with no clock," Karimi said. "If the teacher goes over the time, you could just see that it is 20 after and leave. You can also know how you are progressing during a test."

Karimi said he also is concerned about the left-hand turn lane at the intersection of Claflin Road and Denison Avenue. Neises said he agreed with Karimi's concern on the topic.

"I used to live in Goodnow," Neises said. "There were many times we entertained ourselves by watching the traffic back up at that light."

Barker, presidential candidate, and Kauffman, vice presidential candidate, were the last set to appear on the show. Barker said he thought the informal interviews were a good idea to get to know candidates.

"I thought the questions were reasonable," Barker said.

"When we talk to organizations, we talk about the same things. Here, it was just informal, and we can let people know that we are not much different from them."

Barker and Kauffman answered questions from Green and Neises about which buildings had the best bathrooms on campus, but they also were able to speak about their issues when an outside caller called.

"One of our major issues is freshman orientation," Barker said when a caller inquired about how they would improve freshman orientation.

"Right now, we have a day orientation and visit, but many other schools in the Big 12 are following the trend toward extended stays and visits on campus. They give the student the chance to get to know the campus better and help to result in higher freshman retention."

Matt Jolly, program director for the radio station, said the show was a new idea for the station, but he said could see the informal session as becoming a standard during election time.

"I think it is not often that you would get such personal interaction with candidates," Jolly said. "I think it is a really good time, and the candidates have fun."

Green and Neises said they are just out to have a good time and provide an entertaining show so the student body can get to know their candidates.

"Thanks to Dan and Phil, maybe someone has some more votes now," Green said.

Empty faculty spots in Arts, Sciences may remain due to cuts

By JAMIE BARRETT
Kansas State Collegian

Peter Nicholls, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, only can speculate about what to do to deal with the proposed budget cuts for the next fiscal year.

"Nothing is definite," Nicholls said. "Of course, there is a real possibility that we could lose millions out of next year's budget."

Gov. Bill

Graves'

proposed budget calls for a

$2.1 million cut in the systems

budget and a $1 million cut in an instructional technology fee. Nicholls said the College of Arts and Sciences is trying to figure out how to deal with the cuts, if they occur.

"The only way we are going to be able to recapture the money in our college is from salaries," Nicholls said.

"There is a large turnover of faculty every year, and we would plan to keep some of those positions open instead of fill them again."

Nicholls said the top priority is making sure the students are not affected by the cuts.

"When dealing with this budgetary impact, we have to look at the impact on the students," Nicholls said. "Our highest priority is making sure the students get through their degree programs in a timely manner."

Nicholls said that even though there might be fewer instructors, the availability of classes should not change much from the past years.

"There is going to have to be flexibility," Nicholls said. "Students may find it tough to get into sections of classes, but they are going to have to be flexible about the types of classes they take and when they take them if there is a limited amount of space."

Stacey Nofziger, assistant professor of sociology, said she believes classes still will be available to students, but there might be a loss of student and professor interaction.

"I think students are going to lose out on some of the interaction with faculty," Nofziger said. "There is going to be a burden on faculty within their classes, and it may be harder

for students to develop relationships with their professors."

Erik Jacobs,

graduate student in English and graduate teaching assistant, said even if there are less professor positions in the future, there always will be a large quantity of graduate students to teach the lower level classes.

"We will have people teaching the lower level courses no matter what," Jacobs said. "There would not be a lack of instructors in most areas."

Many graduate students are very successful at teaching their classes," Nicholls said another area of concern is the proposed $1 million cut in the technology fee.

"We used to get two-for-one equipment match money from the state," Nicholls said. "So far, that funding has not been identified. Our equipment gets heavy use, and not having that technology money could be a heavy blow to some programs."

Nicholls said strong representation from K-State at the legislature might help the situation.

"K-State operates incredibly efficiently on a limited budget at the worst of times," Nicholls said. "The university has a positive, forward-looking faculty and students, which is what is important in times of need."

Cats prepare for season finale

By DEREK BOSS
 Kansas State Collegian

K-State's 3-12 Big 12 Conference record might warrant anything but enthusiasm heading into Saturday's regular season finale.
 Unless head coach Jim Wooldridge has anything to say about it.
 Conversely, the Cat coach said the effort put into this weekend's contest, pitting the Wildcats (9-17) against Colorado (15-13, 5-10) in Boulder, will be no different than any other game this year.
 And he was quick to make that point clear to his players after Wednesday night's 65-77 loss to Kansas.
 "What I told our kids in the locker room after the game was that we're not going to Colorado to finish our season," Wooldridge said. "We're going to Colorado to win the game."

Not that junior Travis Reynolds or any of his teammates are approaching the Buffalo contest any differently. The 6-foot-7 forward said the Cats need to come out with the same intensity they displayed against the rival Jayhawks.

"If we can come out and give that kind of effort, I think we'll be right there at the end," Reynolds said. "We can't let down just because it's our last game."

Besides, the Cats will be looking to avenge their 63-70 loss to Colorado three weeks ago in Manhattan — which marked defeat No. 6 during K-State's seven-game, monthlong losing skid.

In that game, the Buffaloes led by 11 at the break and as many as 14 before the Cats mounted a comeback. K-State cut the lead to four with less than a minute to play, but Wooldridge's club faltered in the closing seconds, missing its last five shots of the contest.

At any rate, though, Wooldridge said he's concentrating on getting his team mentally prepared for this weekend, especially when others might view Saturday's matchup with Colorado as meaningless in the conference standings.

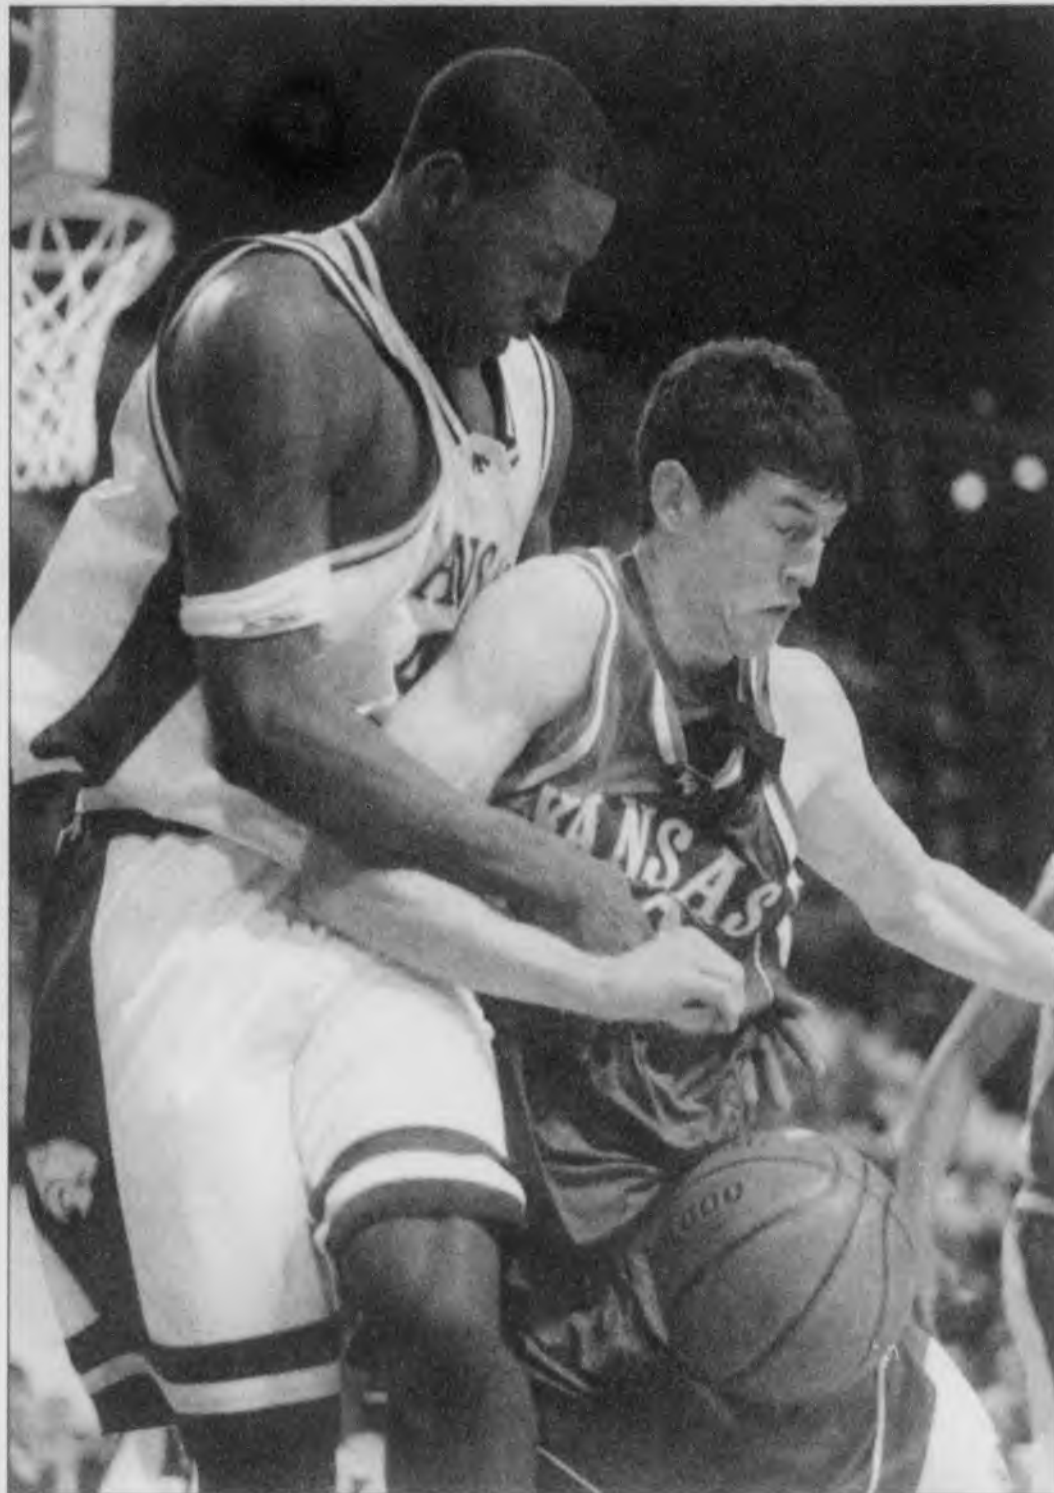

"When you look at the end of the season and where we are," Wooldridge said, "you think, 'What's there to play for?' There's a lot to play for."

"I want kids in our program to know when we go play games, we're going to win. We're not going in thinking we're going to lose. We're not going for some moral victory. We're going to win the game."

To do that, however, Wooldridge knows he needs his players to respond on the court in the face of adversity.

"You have to have players step up and play, and we have to have players step up and make that statement. Otherwise, we will always be in an underdog role."

"We don't want to be that way."
 Nevertheless, in Wooldridge's first year at K-State, he said he understands it takes time to just work through the cycle.

"It's a learning process. It's a process that takes you from point A to point Z," he said. "So this is, again, a very important basketball game. We will prepare as hard for this game as any game we have played this year."

"We have to treat this game like we treat every league game."

Sophomore Quentin Buchanan said he's looking at it in the very same light, but also as a chance to ignite K-State's fire heading into the Big 12 Tournament, which begins Thursday at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo.

"I'm looking forward to the game," he said. "It's our last game and then we've got the tournament, and I think we can do some things in the tournament."

Pitching main concern for Wildcats in ISU contest

By DAN SMITH
 Kansas State Collegian

K-State's baseball team will have two opponents this weekend as the Cats try for their first conference win of the season.

Inclement weather swept across the midwest earlier this week, canceling a contest against Oral Roberts in Tulsa, Okla., on Tuesday. The same system dumped nearly six inches of snow here earlier this week, the remnants of which are threatening to wipe out baseball this weekend.

Snowy conditions have forced the team to practice at the Brandenberry Indoor Complex this week, something junior Luke Robertson said is somewhat of a disadvantage for the team.

"I think it would have been good to be able to get back outside for practice and not have this long of a layover between games," he said, "but there's not a whole lot you can do about it, so we try to stay focused inside."

K-State (5-6, 0-3) will have to stay focused a bit longer before this weekend's series against Iowa State (5-7, 0-0).

Saturday's scheduled games have been pushed back one day because of unplayable conditions at snow-packed Frank Myers Field. But with no precipitation in the forecast and highs expected in the upper 40s and 50s, play could resume Sunday afternoon, assistant sports information director Tom Gilbert said.

Weather permitting, the teams will meet at noon Sunday for a double header and at 1 p.m. Monday.

The Cats have not played since scoring just four runs in a three-game set against Texas last weekend in Austin. The Longhorns' sweep of K-State ran the Cats' current streak to four consecutive losses, dating back to a Feb. 18 loss to New Mexico in the Applebee's Baseball Fiesta.

K-State saw its team batting average dip to .282 last weekend against the Big 12's second-ranked pitching staff. In the Cats' first eight games, K-State was hitting at .305.

Despite his team's recent hitting woes, head coach Mike Clark's main concern against the Cyclones will be pitching.

"It's real important for us to get back out, play, and get into game rhythm," Clark said. "It's real important for our pitching depth."

The Cats' team ERA is 6.92, mostly due to spotty bullpen work so far this season.

"They're hitting their spots, they're making good pitches around the zone all of the time," Clark said. "This weekend, it's important for them to be competitive and give us a chance to win with our bats."

Iowa State has yet to play in the Big 12 but is on a two-game winning streak after taking two of three games against Arkansas State last weekend.

A big part of the Cyclones' recent success has come from Big 12 Player of the Week Bob Conway's bat. Against the Indians, the senior went 6 for 11 with five RBI, a home run, three doubles and three runs scored.

Conway, a .348 hitter, leads Iowa State in hits (12), doubles (16), home runs (4) and RBI, but as a team, the Cyclones have managed to hit at a .230 average, last in the league, and have just two players with batting averages over .300.

But Robertson said ISU's poor batting averages won't dictate how the Cats approach the series.

"We don't play to the jerseys we're playing," he said. "We go out to compete and win every time. It doesn't matter who we're playing."

Life would be easier for columnist if K-State wins Saturday

A K-State win on Saturday would be a journalist's dream come true.

Well, it at least would make my life a heck of a lot easier. Too bad I don't really have much say in the matter.

Why, you might ask? Because I never have, and never will have, the omnipotent power to sway the outcome of basketball games, or any Wildcat sporting event for that matter. (As I've confessed, the jeans theory was a complete hoax.)

You see, I'm not expecting head coach Jim Wooldridge to use me in his Colorado pregame speech, by any means.

For some reason, I can't hear the guy saying, "Well fellas, that Derek Boss kid from the Collegian really needs us to beat Colorado, so let's get after it."

Sources tell me that's not too accurate.

But in hindsight, a victory over the Buffaloes would make many lives much simpler. The reason? It all depends on the seedings for the Big 12 Tournament.

Right now, the Cats' 3-12 conference record leaves them wallowing in a three-way tie for last place in the league with Texas A&M and Texas Tech. But, K-State has the edge in the event of a tiebreaker, as Wooldridge's club beat both the Aggies and Red Raiders in head-to-head action this season.

So...a K-State win this weekend over the Buffaloes would assure the Cats, without a doubt, the 10th seed in the Big 12 tourney.

Destiny now is in their hands.

In turn, the purple would likely be matched up with Nebraska in Thursday's first-round action, which isn't a bad scenario considering K-State played the Huskers close in one of two meetings this year, falling 63-61 at Bramlage Coliseum in late January.

But more importantly, tip time for that potential KSU/NU game is set for 6 p.m. Thursday.

Just perfect.

No rush of a reporter's deadline. No typing of stories into the late hours of an evening (or wee hours of morning) with school the next day and a two-hour car ride back to the Little Apple. This way, I'll be back home and in bed by 1 a.m. or so.

Oh, can I live with that.
 The only downside? A win as the 10th seed would match the Cats up with the No. 2 seed, which will most likely be Kansas if the Hawks beat Mizzou on Saturday (emphasis on the word "if"). If the Tigers prevail, though, K-State would tackle the Longhorns of Texas.

Nonetheless, if K-State doesn't answer my prayer and defeat Colorado this weekend, things get a little trickier.

The Cats' next best hope is for both A&M and Tech to lose on Saturday as well, in which K-State still would have the tiebreaker and claim the 10th seed in the tourney.

If one of those teams win, however, the Cats are stuck with an 11th seed and a very unhappy Collegian reporter — not in the sense that K-State would likely face Mizzou in the opening round, but that the game is tentatively scheduled for 8:20 p.m.

Now there's a kick in the junk.

The game won't be over until 10:30 p.m., that is, if the previous game didn't run late, and after interviews are over, we'll just say my speed-typing skills had better be up to par. After that, a 120-mile trip home won't be looking too peachy.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Men's basketball team adds 2nd Brazilian player to team

K-State's men's basketball team has added 6-foot, 7-inch, 210 pound forward Marcelo DaBarrosa to the roster.

DaBarrosa graduated from Colegio Santo Americo High School in Sao Paulo, Brazil, and will begin practicing with the K-State team immediately. He will have four years of eligibility remaining beginning next fall.

"We're pleased to be able to bring another young player on board," K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge said. "We were fortunate to be able to utilize a scholarship left available to us from last season's class."

"We're excited about our future here at Kansas State and hope that Marcelo will be a part of that in the coming years. We think he will be able to mature and grow in our system."

As a senior, DaBarrosa averaged 21 points, 13 rebounds and six assists. He spent the last year at the Universidad De Sao Paulo, where he played club basketball. The forward was named one of the top 60 players at the 2000 Nike All-Star Camp by Hoop Scoop. DaBarrosa was a member of the Brazilian National Team that won the gold medal at the 1998 World Youth Games.

DaBarrosa will join fellow Brazilian Gilson DeJesus, an incoming community college player from Trinidad State (Colo.) who also is from Sao Paulo.

7 basketball players named to Academic All-Big 12 teams

Five K-State women's basketball players and two men's basketball players were named to the 2000-2001 Basketball Academic All-Big 12 Teams as announced by the conference office today.

For the women, seniors Morgen Finneran, Marshella Webb, Kim Woodlee and junior Kristin Rethman were all named to the first team. Redshirt freshman Denisha Ferguson earned second team honors.

Finneran, Webb, Woodlee and Rethman repeat as first-team members, while Ferguson makes her first appearance on the second team Academic All-Big 12 list. K-State had three of its five starters among the 19 starters on the first team.

Woodlee, a life science and pre-med major, is a four-time honoree. K-State's all-time three-point shooter is averaging 10.5 points and 3.9 rebounds in 26 games this season. Rethman, a business administration major, has been named to the first team each of the last three semesters. She is the Cats' second-leading scorer with 11.8 points and 4.7 rebounds per game in 26 outings.

Webb, business major, earns her second selection on the team. The Missouri native is averaging 10 minutes a game and started the last two contests. She is posting 1.6 points and 1.6 rebounds per game. Finneran, a pre-physical therapy major, is a three-time first team honoree. She averages 1.6 points, 1.0 rebounds and 1.1 assists per outing. Ferguson, a social science major, has played in 23 games and averages 3.4 points and 2.7 rebounds per outing.

For the men, junior Ivan Sulic and sophomore Donnie Wallace were named to the first team.

Sulic, junior forward in business, has appeared in 24 of the Cats' 25 games this season. In Wednesday's game against Kansas, Sulic tied his career high with four points and set a new career high with eight rebounds.

Wallace, sophomore forward in open option, has played in 16 games and scored a season-high three points against Nebraska on Jan. 30.

The athletes are nominated by each institution's director of student-athlete support services and the media relations' offices. The women's basketball academic all-league squad consisted of 37 first-team members with 13 on the second team. The men's team had 11 first-team members and four second-team selections.

First team members consist of those who have maintained a 3.2 or better grade-point average, while the second team are those who have a 3.0 to 3.19 GPA.

To qualify, student-athletes must maintain a 3.0 GPA or higher, either cumulative or the two previous semesters, and must have participated in 60 percent of their team's scheduled contests. Freshmen and transfers are not eligible in their first year of academic residence.

Bracket announced for women's Big 12 basketball tournament

K-State's women's basketball team earned an No. 11 seed in the Big 12 Tournament and will play No. 6-seed Baylor at 8:20 p.m. Tuesday at Municipal Auditorium in Kansas City, Mo. The game will be televised by College Sports Southwest.

The Cats (12-1, 2-14) enter the game after losing to Baylor (20-7, 9-7) just two days ago 57-74. The game's winner will play No. 3 seed Iowa State at 8:20 p.m. Wednesday.

The championship game will be played March 10 and will be televised by FOX Sports Net.

Fragrant memories

MIKE SHEPHERD/Collegian

Roses are every flower shop's top-selling wedding day flower.

Flower supply affects wedding choices

By BETSY STIVERAK
Kansas State Collegian

The color and vibrance that flowers add to a wedding have long made them an essential part of many ceremonies, but many people can become bogged down in the choices available.

From the average bridal bouquet to the large altar, many types of flowers are chosen to decorate this memorable occasion, Jan Miller, owner of Steve's Floral, said.

"A bride can sometimes choose a completely different style of bouquet for her bridesmaids than her own," she said.

Miller said she has been busy preparing bridal arrangements all year long. People have plenty of options because most of the flowers are available with every season, she said.

"Our top-five selling flowers at Steve's Floral are roses, stephanotis, gardenias, orchids and hydrangeas," she said.

Some flowers can be hard to find depending on the season, Miller said.

"The hydrangeas have a short time when they are scarce. From December to about April, they seem to be very rare in supply," she said.

The orchid also is not always easily available, Karen Medlin, owner of Westloop Floral, said.

"They seem to have a short season where they are hard to find,"

she said.

Westloop's top selling flowers are roses, lilies, stephanotis, lisianthus and orchids, she said.

Depending on the season of the wedding, many people believe the price for the flowers changes, but the season does not seem to affect the price as much as the holiday does, Miller said.

"The prices of the flowers seems to fluctuate during the holiday time. At this time, they are in a much higher demand," she said. "There is an especially noticeable price jump with Valentine's Day."

Connie Lee, manager of Kistner's Flowers and Greenhouse, said some holidays affect prices more than others.

"Valentine's Day, Mother's Day and Christmas are the prominent holidays," she said. "The flowers come from a foreign market. Therefore, the prices go up around the holidays," she said.

Kistner's flower sales show a small variation in their most popular wedding flowers from the other shops. Roses, lilies, carnations, freesia and daisies rank among the highest in demand, she said.

All these flowers seem to be prime choices for weddings, Medlin said. "These flowers are very popular. They are always being shipped from Holland and South Africa to stay in stock when they are available," she said.

Medlin said that despite the variety of wedding flowers, some might not always be easy to find in the quantities required.

"Sometimes the wedding flowers are hard to handle at peak times. With the availability, the cost plays a role," Medlin said.

Medlin said that if the bride is on a budget, the best thing to do is work with a florist.

"They can help you decide how to spend the money," she said.

Medlin said wedding flowers can be difficult to find, especially with the colors and styles they available.

Medlin said the help of a florist is invaluable since they will tend to customers' wedding needs as much as possible. Medlin said a florist can be a great help with these choices.

"It is easy for a florist to guide the customer," she said.

Altan to bring Celtic sounds to K-State

■ Unique instruments add to band's distinct qualities and award-winning sound.

By JENNIFER L. SHERRY
Kansas State Collegian

St. Patrick's Day might be a few weeks away, but Altan's Celtic sound brings Irish culture to McCain Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Monday. Richard Martin, director of McCain, said he couldn't pass up the opportunity to have Altan, a premier Irish band, perform.

"I think lots of people are interested in Celtic music that aren't interested in world music," Martin said.

"Altan really has a great sound, and it seemed fitting because St. Patty's Day is right around the corner."

The six-member band comes from Donegal, a Republic of Ireland, and started its career in the 1980s.

Altan has produced nine albums, won more National Association of Independent Record Distributors Awards than any Celtic band in history and signed a major recording contract with Virgin Records in 1996.

Ciaran Tourish, fiddle, tin whistle and backing vocals for Altan, said he enjoys playing for college audiences.

"Over the years, we've performed for many universities, and we always look forward to the type of crowd that attends," Tourish said.

Altan uses a variety of unique instruments to create its sound, including a button accordion, melodeon and bouzouki guitar, but Martin said Mairead Ni Mhaonaigh, lead vocalist and fiddler for Altan, has her own distinct quality that makes the band worth hearing.

"Their female vocalist really has something," Martin said.

"She has a beautiful voice and a wonderful style that is complemented by the balance of the group."

After Altan signed with Virgin Records, the band achieved gold and platinum albums in Ireland and began touring throughout the world. Altan is no stranger to touring in the United States, but Tourish said there always are positives and negatives to U.S. tours.

"We love the restaurants in this country," Tourish said. "The food here is very good, but a disadvantage is all of the bad weather. It's very cold."

Altan's music ranges from old Irish songs to fast-paced jigs and reels.

The band's style often is compared to the Chieftains, a famous Irish band that performed at McCain two years ago.

The band members of Altan are good friends with the Chieftains and feel they share a similar sound, but each band has its own style, Tourish said.

Thom Jackson, marketing and development officer for McCain, said he thinks the band's performance will be an exciting experience.

"This is an unusual and fun group," Jackson said. "Their music is upbeat and very interactive. It will be hard to sit still."

The goal of Altan is to stay committed to playing traditional music, especially of the Donegal fiddlers and singers, to contemporare audiences.

Inspiration for the band comes from Ni Mhaonaigh's late husband and founder of Altan, Frankie Kennedy.

Kennedy was diagnosed with cancer in 1991, and a final request in 1994 was for Altan to continue in his memory.

Tourish said the band doesn't tour just to sell more records.

"We really hope to widen our audience as much as possible," Tourish said. "And want as many people to experience the ongoing tradition that we love to play."

Web design contest enhances creativity, offers money

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

The creativity and design skills required to design a Web site now can be used for scholarship money.

The 2001 Student Exhibit Design Competition is encouraging students across the country and in Europe to participate. Three to four scholarships of $5,000 are being offered.

Amber Jacobs, sophomore in graphic design, said the competition is a good challenge for student Web page designers.

"It would be more fun than writing an essay for a scholarship," she said. "Some students are able to show their talent more through creation on projects like this than they are in writing."

The competition, now open to individual students, previously required a course to be taken beforehand, said Pete Dicks, executive director of Exhibit Designers and Producers Association.

"We wanted to broaden the involvement," he said. "We want to reach students through the Internet and broaden the scope of students who participate."

The competition was created seven years ago, and this is the first year to offer scholarships.

"We wanted to get more students involved — encourage their creativity," Dicks said.

Previous competition requirements allowed teams with an average of 4 students from each university to apply.

"We expect about five times as much now that individuals can apply," Dicks said.

The entries basically should communicate excitement, the challenge and potential rewards associated with leading the world into cyber-technology, he said.

The situation to set up the design is Robot-Z, a start-up fictitious company who has developed plans and technology to bio-engineer the first cyber-bionic robot. They want to become the first producer of cyber-robotic man-toids.

The competition is sponsored by The Exhibit Designers and Producers Association, Exhibitgroup/Giltspur, The Freeman Companies and Cort Trade Show.

Entries for the competition have been available since Jan. 16, and Dec. 1 is the deadline. Students at K-State can find detailed information and entry forms at the Web site if they are interested in competing.

Dicks said.

"You will find out everything you need to know on the site," he said.

Jacobs said the competition would be good for designers to try and create something more than a personal Web page. Actually trying to maintain readers' attention in a marketing site is a more professional application, Jacobs said.

"For those who want to do Web design for a living, it's good experience," she said. "You have to work harder at making a professional Web site."

Forty to 50 students are expected to apply, and rules can be found at www.LaunchYourCareerinExhibitDesign.com.

"It has always been a successful competition," Dicks said. "We expect a huge response and lots of creative applicants again this year. It should be a great turnout."

THE GONGFARMER

BY RANDY REGIER

MICHAEL YOUNG/Collegian

Ron Schwartz presents "Shades of Gray: Disordered Eating & Campus Life" on Thursday evening in the Union Main Ballroom. The presentation was organized to coincide with Eating Disorders Awareness Week.

Eating disorders topic of speech

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

People with possible eating disorders were urged Thursday night to seek treatment.

Ron Schwartz, a nutrition specialist at Baptist Medical Center in Kansas City, Mo., discussed eating disorders in the Main Ballroom of the K-State Student Union.

"If you, in your own life, have something that is going on, get advice," she said. "You can get advice to help your life."

She gave the same advice for those who care about people with possible eating disorders.

"If you are a friend or sibling, you can't fix it," Schwartz said. "The only thing you can do is tell them they need help."

Her speech, "Shades of Gray: Disordered Eating and Campus Life," touched on the subject of eating disorders and outlined some of the causes, giving examples of purging and bingeing. She discussed eating disorders such as bulimia and anorexia. Schwartz said she has seen the effects of the disorders first-hand.

Sometimes, although Schwartz said she never has lost a patient while in her care, such disorders can be fatal.

"I am disturbed because most people's lives that end because of an eating disorder ended before they really began," she said.

The speech dealt not only with the worst-case scenarios, like shrinking of brain tissue and other effects, but it also dealt with the everyday negative habits that people use. One of the main causes of the disorders, Schwartz said, can be control.

"What people tell me is that if I purge it hurts, but I know what pain feels like," she said.

Eating disorders, Schwartz said, can often result from a person overcompensating for another turmoil or trauma.

The difficult part, she said, is that of all the other possible problems possibly causing the eating disorder, no two patients are alike.

"I never met a patient who walked in the door with the same kind of trauma as somebody else," Schwartz said. "There is never one treatment for eating disorders."

Information was passed out to those in attendance detailing the warning signs and outlets for getting help with an eating disorder.

"It helped me gain information on how to help people with the problem," April Rishel, senior in education, said.

Schwartz said giving the information was one of the goals of the presentation, and she encouraged people in need to seek help. She also outlined the causes of eating disorders and said people need to avoid bad habits that can cause eating disorders, including skipping meals, inadequate sleep or a lack of exercise.

Overexercising in itself can result in eating disorders because it can cause people to binge for certain nutrients in the diet.

"Exercise and everything else sometimes finds people having trouble finding a level of moderation," she said.

Local businesses on display

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan Town Center will join forces with the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce to present the first job fair at 10 a.m. today in the mall's center court.

"We've done something to this effect in the past," said Randy Crow, marketing director for Manhattan Town Center, "but this year, we are really stepping up the level of the event."

The job fair will feature booths from a variety of businesses in the Manhattan area from 10 a.m. to 9 tonight and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday.

"We have 20 companies from Manhattan and Junction City," said Lyle Butler, CEO and president of Manhattan Chamber of Commerce. "They are all very supportive of the job fair and are all looking for potential employees."

Butler said the businesses are looking for people to fill entry-level positions to management.

"There is an opportunity for nearly everyone," he said. "We really want to encourage high school and college graduates, technical school graduates and people who are new to the area to check the fair out. There are some great positions open."

Butler said there is a need for the job fair because of a growing number of new businesses in the area.

"We have had a lot of new industries around Manhattan," he said. "There has been a good size expansion, and there is a shortage of workers, so employers are really looking hard right now."

Both Butler and Crow said they suggest potential employees bring in resumes and an idea of what type of position they are looking for.

"If you do that, you are going to be one step ahead of others who are looking," Crow said. "Good planning will also put you ahead because you are going to have an opportunity to speak with potential employers who may be ready to set up an interview."

The job fair will feature employers from a variety of industries, including technology and construction, health care, insurance, manufacturing, law enforcement and city and government. K-State also will have representatives there offering jobs in the education field.

Use of recycled notebooks promoted

By COLLEEN FOOTE
Kansas State Collegian

Buying a notebook could help save the environment.

Students for Environmental Action have designed and made notebooks made out of 100 percent post-consumer waste. The notebooks are being sold at the K-State Union Bookstore for $1.95.

Profits from the notebooks will help fund the organization's Earth Day activities, said Diana Sjogren, club member and senior in marketing.

The notebooks consist of 80 pages of reused computer paper. One side of each piece of paper contains unused notes or computer mistakes collected from computer labs and copy centers on campus. Cereal boxes are used as the front and back covers of the notebook.

"One of our members had heard of this idea from another university and thought it would go over well at K-State," Sjogren said. "We have had a great time making them."

Ben Champion, club president and senior in chemistry, said the organization does not have a set goal for the profits made from the notebooks.

"We hope these notebooks will promote and educate students about Students for Environmental Action," he said.

The covers of the notebooks attract many students because of the fond childhood memories that arise when looking at the cereal boxes, Champion said.

"People like the notebooks because they are original and new to this area," he said. "They're different enough and can strike a chord with a lot of people."

Janet Allison, Union Bookstore employee, said the store always is looking for ways to help student organizations on campus.

"I think this a brilliant idea," Allison said. "Students stop and look at the display of notebooks, and they're selling."

The Bookstore is making a very small profit off the notebooks to help support SEA, she said.

"What we make in the store goes back to the students," Allison said. "All profit made is to better the Union and provide support for all students."

Reaction to the notebooks has been very positive, and many like the idea that the notebooks help provide a cleaner environment, Sjogren said.

"People are always like 'Wow' when they see the notebooks," she said.

"Some people buy them to give to their kids as coloring books, and others buy them as phone message books because they are so neat to look at."

SEA is committed to ensuring a healthy natural environment and conserving the ecological community at K-State, the city of Manhattan and surrounding regions, Sjogren said. She said she hopes students realize they are helping the environment by buying a notebook.

"If you're looking for a notebook, you might as well buy a fun one that will help save the environment," she said.

TRANSIT

system Monday through Sunday.

The plan also includes a Bramlage Park and Ride Shuttle that would be available to students Monday through Friday, where students would park at Bramlage and be shuttled to and from campus.

The Aggieville Special, also part of the proposal, would be in operation Fridays and Saturdays to accommodate customers in Aggieville.

Travis Lenkner, presidential candidate and senior in print journalism and pre-law, said he likes the ideas behind the city transportation proposal.

"Some type of transportation plan sharing the cost with the city is the way to go before garages," Lenkner said. "The transportation system will help if it is properly implemented — the key idea is 'properly.'"

Lenkner said he is not in favor of parking garages and that the transportation method would be less expensive and would remove cars from campus.

Lenkner said he does have concerns with the city's proposal.

"The city plan as stands puts too much cost on students through increased privilege fees and an undetermined parking pass fee increase," he said. "We will have to pay an increase if we want a transportation system, but it should not be as much as a burden when the city could take on part of the cost."

Lenkner said the budget proposal, as it stands now, is calculated as $1.5 million, with students funding $700,000 and city taxpayers funding $260,000.

Additional funding would come from federal grants if Manhattan was considered a federally designated urbanized area with at least 50,000 in the population.

Kyle Barker, presidential candidate and junior in political science and public relations, said he supports the transportation initiative.

"I think bringing transportation to Manhattan is good for the students and would enable a lot more students to effectively get around town," Barker said.

Barker said he thinks the Bramlage Park and Ride Shuttle option could succeed, but as far as the citywide proposal, he thinks they are asking for a lot of funding from students.

"The plan has the community not paying as much as students," Barker said.

Barker said he feels the Aggieville Special option attracts a lot of students' interest and is something to be pursued.

"Transportation is a hard issue to face, and I think a lot of students are concerned with meter parking and small parking lots," Barker said. "If students are concerned, then we want to try in every way to alleviate it."

Rick Wooten, presidential candidate and senior in radio and television, said he doesn't see any problem with parking on campus and that it is an individual problem — not campuswide.

"I like to encourage walking, and that has always been our stance," Wooten said. "Walking is a good thing and a good form of transportation with no meter or gas costs."

Wooten said there are lots of people who are within walking distance and that people who live too far away park on side streets.

"I see people come in out of town or Westloop and see them park close enough to campus," Wooten said.

Ali Karimi, presidential candidate and junior in radio and television, said transportation is one huge problem, and there is not one answer.

"We need to attack it and reform how parking passes and tickets are handed out," Karimi said.

Karimi said he proposes that parking passes be distributed based on location to campus, based on a radius of one-half mile to three-fourths of a mile, and also by seniority. Karimi also said he thinks the time frame for ticketing students should be every 50 minutes.

"You are only in office for one year, and this is not a problem that can be solved in one year," Karimi said.

The final presidential candidate, Ben Hopper, senior in agriculture communications and journalism, said he feels the work that has been done with the transportation system is moving in the right direction.

"Parking is a big issue on campus, especially for those who have to travel across town or commute," Hopper said. "There are solutions, and we will work with students to find the best way to solve it by working with the city and K-State administration."

"We don't want to jump the gun though and initiate something that, in the long run, won't be beneficial."

Hopper said the proposed transportation system would be beneficial to K-State and students, but he said he feels they would support the proposal fully if students didn't have to pay for the majority of it.

"There is a lot of work that needs to be done, and it will always be an issue," Hopper said.

PEACE CORPS

Hilpman had 400 high school students.

"Five years later, I returned for a visit, and much to my great joy, learned that eight of those students were graduate English teachers," Hilpman said.

"When I asked them how they ever learned any English, they said they had to because I spoke no Polish."

The language gap did not keep Hilpman from enjoying her life in Poland.

"I think all volunteers feel they were assigned to the best place in the world, and I'm no exception," Hilpman said.

Life abroad also changed her personality.

"I became more open to people," Hilpman said.

Upon her return from Poland, Hilpman worked as a Peace Corps recruiter in Kansas City and Denver.

"Primarily, I traveled to the universities in Kansas trying to find people interested in becoming a Peace Corps volunteer," Hilpman said. "In addition to students, many retired professionals, especially teachers and nurses, are interested in joining Peace Corps."

Steven M. Graham, assistant to the dean and director of K-State's Research and Extension at College of Agriculture, was recruited to Peace Corps in 1973 by passing a table located in the Western Illinois Student Union at Western Illinois University.

"The presence of a Peace Corps recruiter, like Barbara Hilpman, is very important for visiting with people at a table or going to classes and clubs to make presentations," Graham said.

"Her ability to say, 'I was a PC volunteer and this is what the experience is,' is crucial."

The number of Peace Corps volunteers worldwide is the highest it has been since 1974, said Kristi Carlin, public affairs specialist at Peace Corps Denver Regional Office.

She said Kansans have been consistently volunteering over the past 40 years.

Just in Manhattan, there are approximately 30 returned Peace Corps volunteers.

Many of them are connected to K-State.

"K-State students are represented in each of our regions," Carlin said.

Hilpman said she encourages K-State students to broaden their horizons through an international experience.

"We think that the whole world is like we are," Hilpman said. "And it is not so."

Faculty Senate, and we revised the resolution to include student responsibilities, along with adviser responsibilities."

There now is advising criteria outlined in the University Undergraduate Catalog and in the Faculty Handbook, but Worcester said he would like to take it one step further.

"Neither of those are what we think advising responsibilities should be," he said. "It is not being made a priority, and we want to change that. We want to make faculty accountable for their advising, and we want to give students a basis on what they should expect and contribute to their advising experience."

Worcester said he hopes the advising and student responsibilities will be adopted as a university-wide policy.

"We want Faculty Senate and other officials to look at this recommendation and see that we strongly recommend this and that we have done our research," he said. "This gives us an official statement to take to Faculty Senate, and our hope is that it will be utilized."

"The responsibilities are important and vital to a student's success at K-State, and we want to establish that criteria."

Senate-recommended advising guidelines

Student Responsibilities:

1. Participate in orientation and pre-enrollment sessions with their advisers.
2. Come to advising appointments prepared with options for future class work or other information pertaining to that session.
3. Inform advisers of any special needs, deficiencies or barriers that might affect academic success.
4. Seek assistance as soon as questions arise pertaining to academic performance or progress.
5. Work with advisers to develop both short- and long-term goals relating to academic and co-curricular activities.

Adviser Responsibilities:

1. Assist students in setting both short- and long-term goals.
2. Accurately inform students of graduation requirements, including any information that would minimize the number of semesters required for graduation, and academic policies and procedures.
3. Assist students enrolled in dual- or multi- majors in cross scheduling.
4. Inform students of possible career opportunities in their field of study and any post-graduate work that might be beneficial to the student.
5. Be available, with reasonable hours and methods of availability, for appointments that allow an adequate amount of time to make curricular and career choices.
6. Provide information to students to inform them of their responsibilities in the advising system.

Union forced to reduce cost, hours

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

A reduction of services went into effect Sunday at the K-State Student Union following its request last week for emergency funding from Student Senate, Union director Bernard Pitts said.

The Union Governing Board approved the cuts Feb. 27, and they will continue through the end of the fiscal year, June 30.

The approved cuts include reduced hours for the Union Food Court and the K-State Union Bookstore, closing the Cats' Den on Sundays, placing a hiring freeze on certain positions in the Union and reducing the Union Food Service staff by five full-time employees.

The cuts should give the Union an estimated savings of $150,000, Pitts said.

Pitts said these cuts don't necessarily mean a reduction of income for the Union. In fact, he said, sales might increase.

"Our services are still offered.

They're just reductions of services," he said. "We still have the potential for increases in sales."

Pitts said he will know this week whether the Union will receive the emergency funding.

"The Privilege Fee Committee gave a first reading to Senate, so we'll know the outcome this Thursday," he said.

The main reason the emergency funding is needed, Pitts said, is because of the debt the Union acquired following the recent Union renovations that were done during a two-year period.

"The renovations called for increased expenses that we didn't anticipate," Pitts said. "It caused an increase in labor costs, and we needed more staff for the Union Food Court renovation. So, we fixed some things, but we added some expenses."

Kay Farley, manager of the bookstore, said hiring freezes in some cases aren't unusual, especially in the spring. In the bookstore, she said, there has been a hiring freeze for the position of an art supplies sales associate, and the Union cannot afford to fill the position until the next academic year.

"We'll look at getting a full-time person next year," she said. "This isn't uncommon. There's always a freeze on filling vacant positions."

Pitts said he agreed, and that the Union simply is following in the footsteps of the university itself.

"A hiring freeze is just one process you can go through with reductions, so we have mirrored the university's stance on this issue," he said. "Our services still continue, but our staff is asked to do more."

Students, however, are suffering from the Union cuts, said Phil Mayer, graduate student in economics.

"I eat lunch every Thursday in the Union," Mayer said. "I've noticed the past few weeks that they've had two registers open during the lunch rush, and in the past, they've had four or five. I've recently had to wait in line at least 10 minutes. It shouldn't take that long. It's ridiculous."

"If the employees are on work study, 80 percent of their salary comes from the government, so there's no reason

Union reductions

These are the main cuts the Union put into effect starting Sunday.

- Hiring freeze on full- and part-time positions in the Union, including a hiring freeze on two full-time staff positions in Food Service and the cut of five full-time staff in Food Service those registers shouldn't be adequately staffed," Mayer said.

Pitts said he hopes faculty, staff and students will make their voices heard and offer feedback about the Union cuts, which might stay in place. The June 30 ending date, he said, is tentative.

"Depending on campus feedback, we might continue some of these reductions," he said.

University prepares for shortfall

■ Wefald faces the worst financial situation since his arrival in 1986.

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

President Jon Wefald said a combination of the governor's proposed budget cuts, an ending to the funding for technology, increase for faculty and staff salaries and rising energy costs are putting K-State in the worst financial pinch since he arrived in 1986.

"The university was already operating with inadequate funding for several years," Wefald said.

Student body presidential candidate Rick Wooten said he does not think pending alcohol-related criminal charges should preclude him from running or taking office.

Wooten is scheduled to be arraigned Thursday, the day after voting ends, for allegedly serving alcohol to a minor Feb. 19 at the Aggie Lounge, where he works.

He is scheduled to go to trial March 27 on charges of driving under the influence, leaving the scene of an accident, refusing to take a breath test and unsafe turning.

The incident related to the DUI charge occurred Dec. 10 at 1850 Claflin Road, outside the apartment complex where he now lives, according to court records.

Wooten said he has pleaded not guilty to the DUI and Pride and posterity led many graduates from fall 1999 and spring 2000 to buy 535 granite stones that have their names and the initials of the college they received their degree from engraved on the top.

The senior sidewalk, which starts in front of Memorial Stadium by 17th Street, was dedicated Friday afternoon when President Jon Wefald pounded down a stone with a ribbon-decorated mallet.

"It's neat for posterity to bring your kids back and see your name etched in stone," said Jesse McCurry, graduate student in speech communication and recent K-State graduate.

For Dr. Seuss' birthday, children from the Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan fell in love with reading again ... with the help of some friends.

Members of Sigma Phi Epsilon celebrated the famous author's birthday with the kids by putting on a number of activities, including face-painting, arts and crafts, planting Lorax trees and eating green eggs and ham.

"Today's a very special day. Does anyone know what today is?" Trisha Niumata, site coordinator for the Boys and Girls Club, asked the audience of about 40 kids before the events kicked off. "Yes, it's Dr. Seuss' birthday. How many of you have read some of his books?"

Nearly every hand raised in enthusiasm.

Geoff Norby, Sig Ep member and sophomore in German and international studies, said the activity was done as a philanthropy for the fraternity and that Dr. Seuss actually was involved in the fraternity on a national level.

"He became an honorary member," Norby said as he painted a dinosaur on the face of a little boy, "so it's pretty cool."

Miranda Pinnick, 11, licked her lips in anticipation as Niumata added green food coloring to a batch of fried eggs and diced ham on a hotplate.

"I'll eat all of it if no one else will," she said. "I loved eating green eggs and ham this morning. I mean, it isn't like anyone blew their nose on it or anything. It's just food coloring."

Brian Macfee, sophomore in accounting and Sig Ep member, nodded as he watched as well.

"Looks like it's straight from the book and onto the grill," he said.

In another part of the building, a large roll of paper was rolled out to be stepped on so kids could leave their own little marks, reminiscent of Seuss' "The Foot Book."

"Let's go!" shouted Doug Sheahan, Sig Ep member and sophomore in computer science, as he lifted a giggling child into the air and onto the paper.

"The best part about this is that these kids are unpredictable," he said while rinsing the boy's feet off in a cooler full of warm water.

Tim Price, 8, smiled as he painted Norby's face a rainbow of colors. In true Dr. Seuss form and with a

Salina to receive funds from tobacco lawsuit

SALINA, Kan. — The first funding from Kansas' share of the national tobacco lawsuit has been awarded to Salina, which plans to use the $500,000 to crack down on youth smoking, nonsmoking health programs and other initiatives.

Saline County's efforts are seen as a test because if they're successful, the county could become the model for other anti-smoking initiatives.

Kansas is to receive about $1.7 billion as part of the national lawsuit that sought compensation for the added health care costs attributed to smoking and was settled in 1998 for $246 billion.

Kansas aims to reduce the number of smoking-related deaths in the state, said Julia Francisco, director of outreach programs for the bureau of health promotions in the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

Francisco works with youth tobacco prevention programs, and her bureau oversees the Salina grant.

A coalition of Salina social welfare and government officials Friday spelled out their initial plans for the grant.

The largest portion of the funding, more than $160,000, will go to various community programs, including surveys to gather data on smokers and advertising campaigns to promote smoke-free indoor air.

The effort is expected to include the push for a local ordinance banning smoking in restaurants.

Work toward that goal already had begun before the tobacco grant was awarded.

A committee from the County-City Health Board last year planned to conduct public hearings to seek support of the Salina City Commission, which could turn the no-smoking effort into law, said Salina City Commissioner Larry Mathews, who also is a representative of the health board.

Aircraft carrier in honor of Reagan christened

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. — President Bush dedicated a $4-billion aircraft carrier in honor of Ronald Reagan on Sunday and pledged to pursue the 40th president's desire to patiently build the momentum of freedom in every corner of the world.

In the wind and rain, Bush and his wife, Laura, flanked former first lady Nancy Reagan at a christening ceremony at Newport News Shipbuilding that was attended by hundreds of military personnel and their families.

Bush praised Reagan for his commitment to building military strength and promised to do the same in keeping with the former president's vision of optimism, modesty and resolve.

Comic honors women scientists

By KECIA N. SEYB
Kansas State Collegian

Science is women's work, a performer said Friday morning in Forum Hall.

Jane Curry, author, storyteller and entertainer, shared humorous misconceptions about women scientists and engineers in the history as she informed her audience about the contributions these women made to society and the stereotypes they had to work against.

Curry performed as Barbara Knight in "Miz Wizard's Science Secrets," a performance made of two acts. In the first act, as Barbara Knight, Curry acted as if she were in the television studio of WTN, public access Channel 82, showing the director her idea for a show that would inform viewers about science.

In the second act, Curry appeared as Knight again. Knight was in the studio again, shooting her premiere show as Miz Wizard in front of her "live audience," which included several high school girls who were visiting for a recruiting event, Designing the Future: Science and Engineering Career Exploration Day.

In the real "Miz Wizard's Science Secrets," Knight said each week she would honor a woman scientist or engineer. In her pilot episode she honored astronomer Maria Mitchell, who, like many other early women scientists, had to work against the social expectations of her time.

"She rejected studies of her day — that intense study would ruin her health," Curry as Knight said about Mitchell.

In character, she made many other cracks about men, women and the way their roles were for the era.

"Next time you need an excuse for not finishing homework — too much study could lead the uterus to atrophy," she said.

Men had headaches, women had female complaints; men had indigestion, women had female complaints; men had epilepsy, women had female complaints, she said.

Jane Curry, author, storyteller and entertainer, sings a song about how all the bones in the body are connected to the ovaries in a woman's body. Curry performed a two-act play, teaching misconceptions about women scientists and engineers of the past. MATT STAMLEY/Collegian

A 1977 study concluded that women were physiologically abnormal, she said.

"Men are normal. Women are not like men. Therefore, women are abnormal. It's so nice to have a standard to live by," she said.

Despite all of these stereotypes, there were women who worked as scientists and inventors, paving the way for future generations of women who enjoy science and mathematics, Curry said.

Curry as Knight showed video clips of women scientists of the past, showing their professions and their names. Among them were chemist Marie Curie, physicist Shirley Jackson and primatologist Jane Goodall.

Women scientists have been denied access to labs and clubs, worked without titles and received little or no pay, Curry said.

"We have our 'sheroes,' and we don't even know most of their names," she said.

Miz Wizard's show also consisted of some experiments to demonstrate science. She showed water in a bucket with a rope attached to the bucket.

"If you have water in a container and you turn it upside down, it will usually fall out," she said. "Add a little velocity and swing it in a circle. We'll all stay dry."

She explained that centrifugal force forces the water in the direction of the motion.

Curry performed the show again Saturday as part of Girl Scouts' day. "Miz Wizard's Science Secrets" is one of four solo shows Curry has performed in 46 states, Israel and Japan. Friday, however, was her first performance in Kansas.

Sarah Stewart, freshman in geology, said her favorite part of the performance included the examples of how women have been viewed through the years.

"I went because it sounded really fun," she said. "I thought that it was really interesting."

College of Agriculture faces loss of faculty, fewer classes

BY JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Marc Johnson, dean of the College of Agriculture, said if the proposed budget cuts are passed, students in the college will be affected directly.

"There is really no way to get around it," Johnson said. "The students will feel the changes in the classrooms and with their instructors. Any time a college has less money to work with, students will be affected."

Gov. Bill Graves' proposed budget called for a $2.1 million cut in the systems budget and a $1 million cut in the instructional technology fee. Larry Erpelding, associate dean of the College of Agriculture, said the college is looking for innovative ways to deal with the cut if it occurs.

"We are looking at our options," he said, "but nothing is definite yet. We do know if the cut occurs, it is going to affect students and faculty."

Johnson said the college has 21 faculty positions open and has permission to hire 10 applicants for the open positions.

"Several of those positions spend a great portion of their time devoted to teaching," he said. "Most students have a plan of classes they plan to take, and if we don't have the faculty available, certain classes won't be taught. This may leave the student without a lot of options."

Johnson said it is important to have the positions filled by commencement ceremonies in May.

"If we don't have them hired by then, we can't get them in Manhattan to have them teach in the fall," he said. "This, again, may leave a lot of classes open."

Johnson said the college has several classes that only are offered once a semester or even once a year.

"When we cut faculty positions, we are cutting areas of expertise," he said. "By not having that instructor to teach a certain class the semester it is offered, we are leaving big holes in our college. But if the cuts come, I have to anticipate that we will have to leave some of the positions open."

Agriculture Sen. Zeb Larson said he is disappointed by Graves' decision.

"I don't see how we are going to function as a college," Larson said. "The cuts are really going to set students back if they can't get into the classes they need to graduate. It is going to narrow the path the student can take, rather than broaden it, as college should do."

Johnson said if the proposed budget passes, the college will try to fill in the gaps left by the cuts.

"Many times we will have other faculty pick up additional classes," he said. "However, this leaves them sacrificing their research or their preparation time for other classes just to make ends meet."

Johnson said the budget cuts especially will hurt the college because it will come on top of high utility bills.

"Our utility bill alone is expected to be over $50,000," he said. "This represents 20 percent of the entire operating expenses budget."

During the last 12 years, Johnson said the college has worked with 25 percent less operating money without considering inflation.

"Our utility bill is going to be almost equivalent to what we lost over the last 12 years," he said.

"Losing that amount of money to utilities, plus the proposed budget cuts, is not leaving us a lot of options."

Now, Johnson said he plans to keep the course catalog the same in hopes that the issue will be resolved by the fall semester.

"We don't want to overreact till we know what is going to happen for sure," he said. "We are just really hoping that by the time the Legislature leaves town, we won't have to deal with this. However, we will be prepared if the cuts occur."

MONDAY, MARCH 5, 2001

e ONLINE
Lorena Barboza writes about the Spanish language at www.kstatecollegian.com.

OPINION EDITOR: ERIN SCHNEWEIS

Every student has ability to affect election

From today until Wednesday there is something all students need to add to their to-do lists: vote in the student elections.

Voting will take place online only. The polls opened at 7 this morning and will close at 5 p.m. Wednesday.

There are no excuses for why students will not be able to vote.

We have five sets of student body presidential and vice presidential candidates. Also, it is time to vote for who will fill Student Senate, the Fine Arts Council, Union Governing Board and several other organizations that work to keep K-State running smoothly.

The Collegian and KSDB-FM 91.9 have assisted the candidates in communicating their platforms to the student body. The candidates themselves have done an excellent job of campaigning.

The saying "If you didn't vote, then you can't complain" remains true, and in such a small voting pool, every vote counts.

Decide which issues are the most important to you and the college. Then, study the candidates' platforms and see which one matches closely with yours. Ask yourselves which groups or Senate members actually will be able to fulfill a majority of their campaign goals.

These will be our student leaders. They will make the decisions that affect you. There is no reason, no excuse, for why you shouldn't vote.

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics relevant to the publication.

I'd just like to thank the Calvin monitors for not doing their job and now closing the lab at 9 o'clock every night so I can't do my homework. Thanks a lot.

As if we didn't have a big enough parking problem, now they're bringing the alumni building to campus. Thank God I graduate in May. Good luck to the rest of you.

I would just like to give my props to the cop that was smoking in the no-smoking section in front of the Union. Way to fight the system.

If "Monkey Boy" is not supposed to be for our entertainment, then why the hell is it in the paper?

Why does the Union get extra funding? I'm running low on funding. Maybe I should get some, too.

My favorite pothole in Manhattan is in David Levin's head.

I am one of the ignorant people who doesn't like "Monkey Boy." And if it's not even supposed to be funny, then what is its point? It doesn't even have a plot.

Where is my damn Ken Wells? That's all I want, is Ken Wells. Is that so much to ask?

For all of you who missed the presidential debates on Friday, I just wanted to fill you in on what you missed. It was power-tripped, immature bickering, with an occasional dose of comic relief. Classic.

Hey, Rick, I didn't know you had to bash greeks to get votes. The only thing you did by doing that is lost my vote.

Question for Tuesday: Do you support the scope of President Bush's tax cut?

DID YOU SEE THAT?

Embarrassing moments give reason to laugh, not cry

I had just finished taking a Physical World quiz, and I was standing in the hallway, talking to my roommate. After a few seconds of chattering away, I realized she wasn't really listening to me. In fact, she wasn't even looking at me. She was peering somewhere over my shoulder with an expression of utter amusement written across her face.

I turned just in time to see a well-dressed young man carrying a backpack, walking out of the bathroom. This in itself was not necessarily amusing or abnormal, but the three feet of stark white toilet paper attached to the sole of his shoe had struck our attention. Oblivious to the paper parade following him, the young man continued down the hall, and everyone he passed puffed up with repressed laughter.

People pointed discreetly and nudged their friends, and as soon as he disappeared into the lecture hall, the corridor exploded with giggles and a chorus of "Did you see that?"

I am sure sometime after he got to his class, he realized the toilet paper was stuck to the bottom of his foot and probably removed it somewhat sheepishly, only hoping no one had noticed. However, by that time it was too late. People had noticed. Half of Cardwell Hall had noticed, and people literally were tearing up with laughter.

Now I know, in retrospect, it really is not that funny. I mean, from a rational point of view ... big deal, right? So the guy had toilet paper stuck to his shoe.

But, I guarantee that had you been there (assuming you weren't), your laughter would have bellowed right along with everyone else's. The cliché of it, the stereotype of it... the simple fact the guy had toilet paper stuck to his shoe, in real life, just made it hilarious.

I don't know who this poor young man is. I haven't the first clue of his name or his major, and I wouldn't even be able to pick him out in a lineup. But if he is out there reading this, I just want to say thank you and let him know he is appreciated.

I am sure that having toilet paper stuck to his shoe wasn't the highlight of his morning, but I almost can guarantee it was the highlight of mine, and various others.

Stupid things happen. We all make fools out of ourselves on a regular basis. It is just a part of life. I myself am notorious for falling. I could not even begin to count the number of times that I have taken a nose dive across a sidewalk or across a street (Mid Campus Drive, for example).

And, with all the snow and ice on the ground, hundreds and hundreds of people just like me have plowed face first into the puffy whiteness, only to stand up and brush themselves off and walk away before "anyone notices." Right, as if someone didn't notice.

It's like when people hurriedly try to leave through a glass door, only to discover the door only swings inward. And right before their noses get plastered against cool glass, they say, "Oops, wrong way." Clunk. "Ow ... sorry."

Sorry? Don't be sorry.

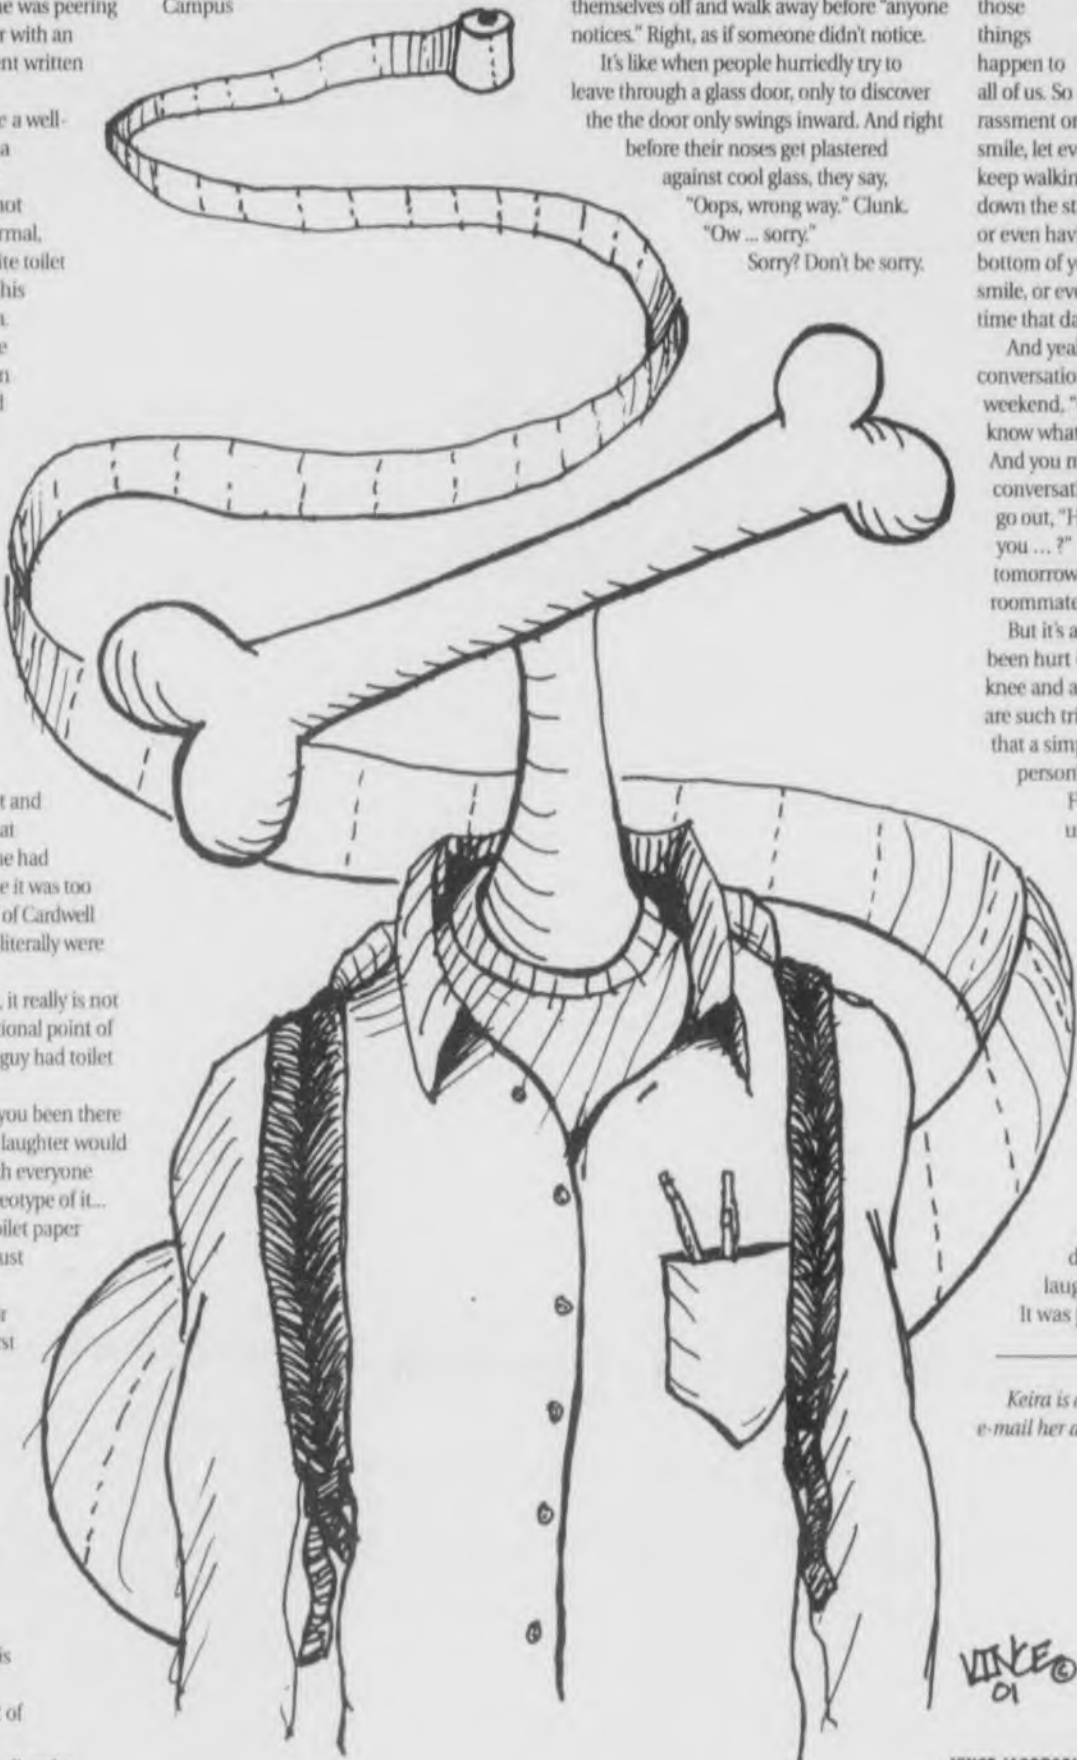

Like I said, stupid things happen ... a lot. And those things happen to all of us. So don't hide your face in embarrassment or let it ruin your entire day. Just smile, let everyone know you are OK and keep walking. Chances are, your slipping down the stairs, ramming into a glass door or even having toilet paper stuck to the bottom of your shoe has made someone smile, or even chuckle, maybe for the first time that day.

And yeah, you might be the topic of conversation at random parties that weekend. "Oh, my goodness ... do you know what I saw on campus this week?" And you might, at times, be a dinner conversation when you and your friends go out. "Hey! Remember that time when you ... ?" Today's follies will be some of tomorrow's fondest memories (just ask my roommate about last year's toga party). But it's all OK. It's all in fun. No one has been hurt (besides, perhaps a bump on the knee and a bruised ego). But those things are such trifles compared to the laughter that a simple foolish act can add to a person's day.

Find solace in the fact that all of us make fools of ourselves at some point, and what goes around definitely will come around. Matter of fact, as I was leaving Cardwell that day, I still was smiling to myself and giggling on the inside about the toilet paper incident. And just as I was about to let out a big, hearty laugh, I lost my footing and fell smack on my butt right in the middle of the sidewalk.

People laughed. Some of them tried not to, but they did. And I couldn't help but laugh, too. After all, it was my turn. It was justice. And it was funny.

Alcohol turns Mardi Gras celebrations sour

Sometimes, there are so many jackasses in the world, I feel like I can't take it.

Apparently, there were surpluses of them last week on the streets of Seattle and Philadelphia. Both cities saw violent riots, property damage and looting, resulting in hundreds of arrests and injuries.

Race riots, you ask? Political revolution, perhaps? Unfortunately, it's not even in the ballpark of such nobility. The unruly masses in the City of Brotherly Love and the City of Brotherly Latte merely were under the influence of alcohol. They were celebrating Fat Tuesday, and they were, in no uncertain terms, piss drunk.

Fat Tuesday is the last calendar day before Ash Wednesday, the beginning of Lent. It marks the commencement of Mardi Gras, the New Orleans celebration of decadent sin that makes everybody who's not in New Orleans jealous. The rest of the country compensates with house parties and drink specials.

Drinking to excess always has been an extreme sport, so it's no big surprise that rowdiness crops up on holidays like Fat Tuesday, St. Patrick's Day and Oktoberfest.

After all, these holidays are less sacred than they are celebratory.

That doesn't explain, however, why Philadelphia store fronts were destroyed and looted, or why parties in Seattle were arrested on minor weapon violations. The hard-core enthusiasts who were busted for fireworks violations were to be expected, but was there really a need to celebrate with handguns? Or for cops to use tear gas?

Picture this: mobs in the street jumping atop posh automobiles and smashing their windshields while passengers are trapped inside. Meanwhile, police officers on horseback retaliate against a vigilante crowd who brandish guns and overtake the barricades.

At the beginning of the 20th century this scene was commonplace, as factory workers who weren't yet unionized participated in organized protests and were willing to risk being shot in the street by corrupt cops owned by big money. It was genuine American revolution.

So, now we're at the beginning of the 21st century, and we have more reasons than ever for melees in the streets. But do we honestly believe that anybody hauled into the station last week could name even one of them?

The sad truth is, the Fat Tuesday incidents were driven by the same force that drives the 21st birthday ritual. The prevailing mentality is that the best way to celebrate the birthdays of loved ones is to get them smashed beyond recognition (justified by the fact that someone older did it to us). You haven't been pushed to the physical limit until you're lying face down in a pool of your own fluids and a friend has to roll you over to prevent you from drowning. That's a real friend.

So, the art of drunken carousing is dead.

Everyone still is drinking, but social alcoholism has lost both its style and its substance. Barroom brawls over politics, art and personal honor have been replaced by trips to the ER for the jackass who tries to do the keg stand. All puns aside, what a waste.

The elders of every generation lament the general decline of collective principles and etiquette. Drunks never have had manners to begin with, so there's no loss there. Historically, however, they have had a specific sense of direction. They knew where they were going, even if it was straight to the bottom of the pit.

Without a sense of purpose or direction, all we're left with is a numbing haze, a comatose cloud that permeates everything from television to academia. It's a disappointment and depressing as hell.

I think I need a real drink.

Nonviolence campaign aims to raise campus awareness

Editor,

Most of us are lucky. We don't experience violence very often, if at all. It is easy to understand that issues of violence often don't enter our minds. It is not until we experience violence, witness it or hear about a violent occurrence on the news that we are reminded of it. Others who share the same campus and classrooms are not as fortunate. To some, violence is more prevalent.

It is because most of us are not often reminded of the violence that goes on beyond our experience that we should make efforts not to forget that it does occur and that others suffer because of it. There is an assumption by many that there is very little violence that occurs in our culture, especially here in the midwest, that violence is something that happens in big cities. Most of the violence that takes place in this country is behind closed doors, and often times the only ones who are aware of it occurring are those involved.

The Campaign for Nonviolence is an organization on campus that is concerned with promoting awareness about violence and countering the violence that does occur. The Campaign for Nonviolence will have representatives from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. today through Friday at the K-State Student Union and from 4 to 6 p.m. at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Center with surveys that we hope will give a clearer understanding of what types of violence people experience and what people's ideas concerning violence are. There probably are as many ideas about what violence is as there are people on campus. Our hope is that by having a better understanding of violence issues and people's perceptions of violence, we will be better able to deter and lessen the violence that presently occurs on and off campus. If there are any questions or comments regarding violence/nonviolence, the Campaign for Nonviolence can be reached at nonviolence@ksu.edu, and our Web page can be found at www.ksu.edu/nonviolence.

Bowling for kids

Community members aid Big Brothers-Big Sisters

By QUINN ASPEGREN
Kansas State Collegian

Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc.'s annual Community Days on Saturday and Sunday included friends, fun, free food, prizes and fund raising.

Community Days, the 17th-annual Big Brothers-Big Sisters Bowl For Kids' Sake, took place at Memory Lanes and the Union recreation area and had more than 70 teams. The bowlers gathered pledges to help raise money for Big Brothers-Big Sisters. It is the largest community-wide fund-raiser in Kansas and is designed to raise awareness in support of matching at-risk children to volunteers through the Big Brothers-Big Sisters program.

"We seem to be right on target this year, as we usually manage to raise at least $40,000, which is one-third of our annual budget. Although we did raise our goal for our 2001 event to $50,000 because we are increasing our programming throughout the area this year, so we hope to reach our new goal," said Big Brothers-Big Sisters assistant director Vicki Terril.

Bowlers were required to gather $5 minimum pledges from area businesses and community members, which then qualified each team of four members to bowl for two hours. Grand prizes were awarded to one adult and child for the top earnings based on paid pledges.

"Since we want to serve more children, we really need the funds to do just that. Our case managers are very busy, and we need the support of the community to keep growing. Our goal is to increase our school programs and to reach even more kids than we already do. If people or businesses were not able to take part in Bowl For Kids' Sake, they can still send contributions to our office downtown," Terril said.

Money for Bowl For Kids' Sake not only was raised by community members and K-State students. Numerous merchants chose to contribute as well.

Steel & Pipe Supply Co. of Manhattan and one anonymous donor were this year's host sponsors, donating at least $1,000 to the event, while Manhattan's Ag Press, Baystone Financial Group, First Bank, Kansas State Bank and Pediatric Associates made up the list of $500 corporate sponsors.

"Over 35 in-kind sponsors gave a wide range of donations and services, as well as the host of 25, $100 Lane Sponsors represented on a plaque at Memory Lanes year round," Executive Director Ken Scroggs said.

Bowl for Kids' Sake serves as the largest source of funds and also potential volunteers for the mentoring program. It also is Big Brothers-Big Sisters sole agency-sponsored fund-raiser, as all donations received from the event stay in the Manhattan area.

Big Brothers-Big Sisters serves more than 100 matches of volunteer mentors matched to children in the community and is the largest volunteer program in Riley County, processing more than 350 volunteers and children yearly. K-State quarterback Jonathan Beasley, who served as a spokesperson for this year's Bowl for Kids' Sake, knows firsthand the benefits of growing up with a "Big" in his life.

"My big brother served as a father figure, and he was another positive role model for me, aside from my mom. We were able to take part in a lot of father-and-son-type activities," Beasley said.

Beasley said he encourages others to become involved in Big Brothers-Big Sisters because of the importance of helping children.

"Kids need more positive role models in their lives, especially in the past 10 to 15 years, more kids are growing up in single-parent homes. I remain good friends with my 'Big.' I've known him for about 11 years. I was in his wedding about seven years ago. He came to football games, and I still visit him when I go back home to Glendale, Arizona," Beasley said.

Aggieville loses another merchant

■ Confetti's Party Shop owner decides to close after more than 7 years.

By ALYSON RALETZ
Kansas State Collegian

Another Aggieville store is closing, but not because of a lack of business.

Terry Walker and his wife, Geri, came to Manhattan 7 1/2 years ago to open Confetti's Party Shop at 712 N. Manhattan Ave. Terry Walker said.

Geri Walker had been diagnosed with cancer, so they left their farm in western Kansas to be closer to their two sons, he said. One was attending K-State.

Two years and a month ago, he said, his wife died, and he has been making the decision to close the store ever since. He said the best piece of advice he received was not to make any large decisions like selling his house or the business for at least a year, he said.

"I lost my wife to cancer," he said. "It's just not the same without her."

He said many of his friendships in Manhattan are from people he has met through the store.

"The business people have been the best friends a man could have," he said. "That is the beauty of Aggieville. They are small businessmen and women with big hearts."

Community members expressed surprise and regret at the news of the closing, said Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association.

"I was shocked and saddened," Sieben said. "I think most Aggieville business owners, because we are like a family, feel the same way."

"You hate to lose a neighboring business, especially when that someone cares so much about the business."

The loss of Confetti's will leave a void in the district, she said.

"They are the only party store in Aggieville," she said. "Anytime you lose a unique business in a unique area, you have lost part of your identity."

Walker said he thinks his employees enjoy working at the shop since he rarely has had anyone quit. They usually leave because they are graduating from K-State, he said.

"What I enjoy most are the students I get to work with," he said. "They're always so upbeat and youthful. I'm going to miss that."

Erin DeFeo, senior in apparel and textile marketing, said she has worked at Confetti's for more than a year. She works the register, creates balloon bouquets and window displays and helps brides with their invitations.

She said she was surprised when Walker told her the store was closing after winter break.

"It was a complete shock because I know he loves the store, and he is so good at his job," DeFeo said. "The other Aggieville business owners and him are like family. I know he is really going to miss them."

She said she plans to work at Confetti's until all of the merchandise is gone, but she does not plan on looking for another job, she said.

"I graduate in May," she said. "I will probably just concentrate on school because it's so hard to find a job in Manhattan."

Walker said he does not know when he plans to finally close the store.

He has had several offers and would like to stay in Manhattan because he still has one son attending K-State, he said, but his plans are not definite.

He said he does not know the future of the Confetti's building. "It is a great location," he said. "I'm sure it won't stay vacant for long."

Ohlde receives Big 12 Freshman of the Year award, beats out Texas, Texas Tech players for honorBy DAN SMITH
Kansas State Collegian

It wasn't just another practice for one member of the K-State women's basketball team Friday afternoon in Bramlage Coliseum.

After averaging 17.1 points and 8.1 rebounds per contest for the Cats this season, freshman forward Nicole Ohlde was voted freshman of the year Friday morning by coaches in the Big 12, beating out Texas' Stacy Stephens and Texas Tech's Jia Perkins.

"I was excited and kind of shocked when they told me," Ohlde said after eating cake and celebrating with her teammates. "I found out before practice, so I was real excited."

After smashing K-State's freshman season and game scoring and rebounding records this season, head coach Deb Patterson said she was hoping for, but not expecting, the rest of the Big 12 coaches to notice the newcomer's influence on the league.

"I was pleasantly surprised," Patterson said. "I had high hopes that she would be regarded on that level, and it was really exciting to know that the Big 12 coaches really noticed and appreciated her performance through the course of the season."

Ohlde wasn't the first to find out about the honor. Senior guard Kim Woodlee found out earlier in the day when she logged onto the Internet to check out her stats. She was so excited for her teammate, she didn't even look at the other conference honors, she said.

"That was great," Woodlee said. "I got on the computer today, and I read that on there, and somebody said, 'Who was on the first team all-conference?' and I said, 'I don't know.' After I saw Nicole's name, I didn't care about the others. I just got up and left."

If she would have stayed online a bit longer, Woodlee might have noticed that the 6-foot-4 Clay Center, Kan., native's rookie campaign also earned her a spot on the All-Big 12 Conference third team, and the Women's Basketball Service's All-Freshman team.

"Some of my teammates came in and said they saw it on the Internet and said, 'Congratulations,'" Ohlde said. "It was exciting."

Exciting was just one of many words used by coaches around the country to describe Ohlde's play this season.

The freshman chalked up six double-doubles, 22 double-digit games, nine 20-plus point efforts and two games with 30 or more this season on her way to leading the Cats in scoring and rebounding. Ohlde also paced the Cats in blocks (16) and finished second on the team in steals (40).

Ohlde earned freshman of the week honors three times this season and became the first Wildcat to earn the freshman of the year award. In addition, the forward also became only the third K-State player to be named to the All-Big 12 team, following in the footsteps of K-State stars Nicky Ramage in 1999 and Andria Jones in 1997.

Patterson said Ohlde's accomplishments this season will make it hard to raise expectations for her sophomore season.

"There's really nowhere to go from here," she said. "When you look at her performance over the course of the season, what stands out to me is, it's a senior-caliber performance."

"I don't know that we think in terms of taking leaps from where she is right now. It's more understanding that what you bring to the floor right now is very, very good."

Cats defeat Buffaloes 72-67, end 3-game losing streak

The Associated Press

BOULDER, Colo. — Matt Siebrandt and his K-State teammates had enough of losing. Siebrandt and Kelvin Howell each hit two free throws in the final 30 seconds, and Travis Reynolds had 15 points as K-State defeated Colorado 72-67 Saturday night.

That snapped a three-game losing streak and a five-game road skid.

"We've been in many games like this, and it was time for us to win one," said Siebrandt, who had 10 points and six rebounds. "We haven't had many road wins, and we agreed it was our time."

Reynolds, who played most of the second half with foul trouble, was 7-for-7 shooting and had five rebounds. Larry Reid and Phineas Atchison had 11 points each for K-State (10-17, 4-12 Big 12).

"Reynolds made some big plays, and we got a big play from Richie Terry down the stretch," head coach Jim Wooldridge said. "But the difference was, we got a lot of big plays, and not from one guy."

Jamahl Mosley had 12 points and six rebounds, and Chevis Brimmer added 11 points for Colorado (15-14, 5-11), which extended its losing streak to a seasonlong five games.

"This was just another difficult loss for us," Colorado coach Ricardo Patton said. "We dug ourselves a hole in our last game of the season and on senior night."

Both teams had turnover problems in the first half. Nick Mohr hit a 3-pointer and short jump shot to get Colorado within 30-27, but Reid's jumper at the buzzer gave K-State a 35-31 lead at halftime.

Colorado tied the game at 59 in the second half when Brimmer hit two free throws and a 3-pointer after an intentional foul. Mosley gave Colorado its only lead of the second half, 67-66, with a layup and free throw with 51 seconds left. Terry's layup returned the lead to K-State with 44 seconds left. Colorado turned the ball over on its next possession, and Brimmer missed a pair of three-point shots.

"Terry made a big-time play off the inbounds play," Wooldridge said. "I don't know if that was the ideal play, but they had taken away all of our options."

Equestrian team members place in top 3 at regionals

Five members of the K-State equestrian team qualified for the Zone Championships by placing in the top three at the Regional Championships at Texas A&M on Saturday.

The team was led by English riders Kristy Rue, who won the Novice Fences division and placed third in Novice Flat, and Gretchen Pfister, who placed first in the Walk/Trot division.

Also qualifying for the Zone Championships were Maureen Reynolds, who placed second in Intermediate Fences; Emily Mertz, who placed third in Intermediate Flat; and Kelly Gratny, who placed third in the Open class.

Four other riders also rode well enough to place but didn't finish in the top three. Kara Jagels placed fourth in Open Flat, Kati Griffin finished fifth in Walk/Trot/Canter, Callie Smith placed fifth in Walk/Trot and Megan Hemberger placed fifth in Beginner. Gratny also finished sixth in Reining, and Reynolds placed fifth in Novice Flat.

The Zone Championships will be March 24 at Fort Collins, Colo. The top two riders in each division at Zones will advance to the National Championships.

Baseball team to face ISU in doubleheader at home

K-State and Iowa State baseball teams will salvage two games of their scheduled three-game series with a doubleheader scheduled for noon today at Frank Myers Field.

Due to time constraints and missed class time, the third game of the series has been canceled.

This is the second time the games have been postponed. The two teams originally were scheduled to play a doubleheader at noon Saturday, with the third game set for 1 p.m. Sunday. However, the doubleheader was moved to noon Sunday, with the final game following 1 p.m. today in an effort to give the field more time to dry with expected warmer temperatures Friday and Saturday.

KU defeats Missouri in regular-season finale

By DOUG TUCKER
The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — Kareem Rush's sore thumb probably had more to do with No. 10 Kansas' 75-59 victory over Missouri than the roaring crowd in Allen Fieldhouse that was fired up for Senior Day.

Rush, the Big 12's leading scorer who had 27 points and 11 rebounds in a 75-66 victory over Kansas in January, returned in Sunday's regular-season finale after missing seven games with a thumb injury.

But he played only 15 minutes and was 1-of-7 from the field, scoring a season-low two points. At the end of the game, the 6-foot-6 sophomore was on the bench with a bag of ice on the thumb.

"With my dominant hand gone ... I didn't go out there to score 21 tonight. I just wanted to help my team," said Rush, who had a light cast on the thumb for support.

With Rush a non-factor, the Jayhawks (23-5, 12-4 Big 12) used a 21-7 run midway through the second half to erase a 31-30 halftime deficit and split their season series with their border rivals for the sixth straight year.

"It's always good to beat Missouri," said center Eric Chenoweth, one of three seniors who bid emotional farewells in their final home game. "We hate them, and they hate us, too."

Drew Gooden, a 6-10 sophomore who spent eight games on the injured list himself until this week, had 19 points and seven rebounds, leading a charge in the second half by the Jayhawks' taller front line.

"I know Kareem struggled a little with his first game back," Gooden said. "Basically, he was out there shooting with four fingers. He kind of scared me when he made that first one."

The Jayhawks, who finished second in the Big 12 regular-season race to Iowa State, will be the No. 2 seed and play the winner of the Nebraska-Kansas State game in the conference tournament Friday.

Missouri (18-11, 9-7) shot just 32 percent and had 21 turnovers. As the No. 6 seed, the Tigers will face No. 11 seed Texas A&M on Thursday.

Student body elections begin at Salina campus

By STEFANIE HOWARD
Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan campus is not the only K-State campus that will have elections this week.

Students on the K-State-Salina campus will have elections as well. Students will be able to vote on student body president, vice president, Student Senate chair and student senators.

Shana Meyer, Student Governing Association adviser, said that unlike the Manhattan campus, the Salina campus has a three-party ticket.

There are students running for student body president, vice president and Student Senate chair on one ticket, Meyer said.

Mike Higley, current K-State-Salina student body president, is running unopposed for re-election. Also running with Higley is Nick Sulzen for vice president and Bryan Hinnen for Student Senate chair. They also are running unopposed.

Andrew Sedlacek, current student body vice president, said it isn't unusual to run unopposed.

"More students want to be involved when there are major issues to be dealt with.

Last year, we had the dramatic increases of parking and privilege fees on our campus," Sedlacek said.

Sedlacek said because this next year is looking to be calm, there aren't as many people wanting to run for the positions of student body president, vice president and Student Senate chair.

"There aren't as many issues that grab the students' attention," Sedlacek said.

Sedlacek said students might be more interested in senate positions instead.

Elections chair Kevin Gorman said the number of candidates is down from last year.

"There are 19 students running for offices here on the campus," Gorman said.

Gorman also said there are not enough candidates to fill all of the positions. Sedlacek stressed the possibility of write-in candidates.

"We have students who are interested in write-ins, which will help fill the open positions," Sedlacek said.

Sedlacek said it is hard to get students involved on campus.

This might be the case, Sedlacek said, because many students attend the K-State-Salina campus for a few years and then transfer to other campuses.

related charges and plans to plead not guilty to the serving alcohol to a minor charge.

The charges do not preclude him from running for student body president or taking office if he is elected, Jake Worcester, student body president, said.

Wooten said he does not think the charges would have a significant effect on voting.

"I think people will understand," he said. "I have not been convicted. I'm a human being."

Wooten said other students at K-State had DUIs, and so did the president of the United States.

"I don't think people will have a problem with someone doing anything if they face the consequences," he said.

Wooten said he does not think the charges would prevent him from being an effective leader.

There are few qualifications for candidates who run for student body president. Undergraduate students must have a 2.0 cumulative GPA and be enrolled full-time.

Worcester would not comment on Wooten specifically, but he said he does not think any candidate should be precluded from running for office because of pending charges.

However, if a student-elected official is convicted of a felony or class misdemeanor while in office, student government regulations require the Student Senate chair to automatically introduce a bill of impeachment.

Senate would debate and vote on the bill. If it is supported by Senate, Student Tribunal would hear the case and decide if the person should be removed from office.

"If he is elected in a Student Senate election, he has every right to take office as I see it," Worcester said. "It is up next to Student Senate."

Families of Japanese boat victims mourn

By PAULINE ARRILLAGA
The Associated Press

HONOLULU — As the Navy prepared to convene a rare court of inquiry into the collision between a nuclear attack submarine and a Japanese fishing boat, the families of some of the nine men and boys lost at sea gathered Sunday to bid farewell to their loved ones.

Relatives of five of the victims cried and clasped leis as a native Hawaiian group offered traditional prayers and songs during an oceanside memorial.

One mother sobbed, clutching a handkerchief, as a ukulele player strummed a melody written in remembrance of the missing.

Family members later sailed to the scene of the accident to scatter flowers across the waters.

Hirohisa Ishibashi, mayor of Uwajima, the boat's hometown, said when he first got word of the Feb. 9 accident, "I wished so hard that it was a bad dream."

"We really need to be told what happened in the submarine," he said.

"We have to do everything we can to prevent anything like this from happening again."

Today, family members are expected to attend a formal investigative hearing by the Navy that seeks to explain why the USS Greenville rammed the Ehime Maru while demonstrating an emergency surfacing maneuver for 16 civilian guests.

The ship, which was carrying 35 people, was on an expedition to teach teen-agers how to become commercial fishermen when the Greenville plowed through its hull.

Four high school students, two teachers and three crewmen never were found.

Waddle's attorney, Charles Gittins, told ABC's "This Week" on Sunday that as the Greenville's skipper, the commander is personally responsible for the accident.

"I am sure that the evidence is going to show that there was a chain of mistakes and, quite possibly, Cmdr. Waddle did not see this vessel and that was one of the chain of mistakes that caused the accident," Gittins said.

"That doesn't mean that those people who made those honest mistakes should ultimately be prosecuted criminally."

Candidates square off during debate

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

The five candidates for student body president answered questions on their platforms and university issues, such as proposed budget cuts, in a debate Friday in the Union Courtyard.

With the voting beginning today, Friday's debate was the candidates' last opportunity to stump for votes in the K-State Student Union. Platforms had been on display throughout the week as campaigns discussed issues with students passing through the Union.

Some presidential tickets saw themselves as outsiders to the system, while others stressed experience as being helpful in getting things done. Candidates answered questions that showcased their platforms on issues that would affect K-State students today and in the future.

Every candidate said working with the Legislature on proposed budget cuts would be important.

Kyle Barker, presidential candidate and junior in political science, said he lobbied representatives with other K-State students at the Statehouse in Topeka.

He said he would continue to take an active role.

"You can't think that you can't convince anyone — you have to realize that you can," Barker said.

Presidential candidate Travis Lenkner and vice presidential candidate Mary Bosco said they have experience lobbying the Legislature and that it is a key component of the job. Lenkner said their experience would lower the learning curve in dealing with administrators and members of the Kansas Board of Regents.

"You have to have knowledge of how the system works and be able to hit the ground running and know who to talk to in the Legislature," said Lenkner, senior in print journalism and pre-law.

Presidential candidate Ali Karimi, junior in social sciences, said increasing the use of the two campus TV stations would greatly improve K-State.

"If we could put the two televisions in the control of the students, then the sky is the limit," Karimi said.

Presidential candidate Ben Hopper, senior in agricultural communications and journalism, said he believes in the improvement of classrooms and technology. He talked about ways classrooms need necessities, along with increased technology.

"With improved quality of classrooms, we would have higher technology than we do now," Hopper said.

The platform of Lenkner/Bosco advocated the SafeRide program and discussed the benefits of the program for students.

Meanwhile, the platform of Barker/Kaufman advocated the enhancement of the freshman orientation program, and they said such a program would improve the campus.

Presidential candidate Rick Wooten and vice presidential candidate Aaron Shea said they are running on a campaign designed to open Student Senate to other groups of people, and the ticket is running on the issue of election reform, such as spending limits. The pair is donating election contributions to charity.

"We would challenge the other campaigns to do the same," Wooten, senior in mass communications, said.

The debate also discussed the candidates' current involvement in Student Senate.

Some students saw themselves as outsiders who would open the establishment to more than just the status quo. Other candidates said it was experience that would enable them to hit the ground running and get goals accomplished.

CRAFTED FOR RADIO

DMB's latest release offers pop appeal

For good or bad, the new Dave Matthews Band album, "Everyday" is less band and more Dave.

"Everyday," packs plenty of infectious pop tunes everyone will be singing along with this summer, but it lacks the jams and solos that have made the band one of the most talented around.

One of the most attention-catching details of the album is that every song is under five minutes. Compare that to the six- and seven minute-long tracks of "Under the Table and Dreaming" and you have an album that is cut lean for plenty of radio air play.

It's not like that's a crime. Jam bands can get boring and too full of themselves. The songs are tightly focused, and DMB fans probably will enjoy the album just fine, while new fans will be drawn into buying the album after they've done everything possible to forget that three-syllable catch phrase, "I Did It."

However, DMB fans will feel the change in this album. Matthews opts for an electric guitar over his familiar acoustic sound in several tracks. Every song focuses much more on vocals, and as well as Matthews pulls them off, the effect is the small sacrifice of the distinctive instrumental work of the band.

While previous albums relied much more on instrumentals to pull listeners in, with songs such as "Ants Marching," "Everyday" uses Matthews strong vocals to draw people to the songs.

The result is an album that either shows growth in a new direction for the band or symbolizes the beginning of the end for the band's creative abilities. By the time the next album is released, fans will know for sure.

Fans will appreciate the traditional sound of tracks like "When the World Ends" and "Sleep to Dream Her."

One interesting aspect of the new sound is that the tonality of the electric guitars brings a sound reminiscent of the The Police on tracks like "Tool to Think." It's almost a return to mass-appeal arena rock, and with the popularity of Matthews' tours, that's not too far from the truth.

As far as the pop appeal of the album, it was completely planned, which might be the best move the DMB could make. The album is completely written by Matthews and acclaimed producer Glen Ballard, and they came up with a trimmed album that is powerful and succinct.

"Everyday" is a good album, and it is going to be huge. Still, chances are, it won't get popped into the compact disc player as often as "Crash" or "Before These Crowded Streets" for true fans.

Talented vocals merit listening

Talented and moving vocals are what give Kate Schrock's "Dames Rocket" its distinctive edge.

Schrock, a vocalist and pianist from Maine, has released an album worthy of attention.

The vocal and lyrical talent on the album are evident from beginning to end, with weaving melodies and potent wording.

Fans of artists like Tori Amos will appreciate the style that Schrock inflects on "Dames Rocket." The sound, driven by piano and vocals with a backup band, is at once sensual, sentimental and insightful.

The album opens with the haunting "Lose Myself" to establish a rhythm and momentum that carry the album. The album is carried wonderfully with the first four tracks as Schrock engages topics without any shyness, such as in "Anything in This World," where she sings, "So I opened up my heart / I tried to let everything come rushing through."

Unfortunately, the melodic momentum is killed in the middle of the album with the bitter track,

"Pig," and the sappy "River." It should be made illegal to compare love to a river ever again in a song.

The energy is somewhat regained with "The Wait" and is carried fairly well for the rest of the album, but the latter half of the album is notably weaker than the first four songs. Still, Schrock's vocal talent does much to maintain the listener's attention.

Comparisons to Amos are unavoidable for Schrock, whose sound is just too similar to the flame-tongued, flame-haired diva at times. For instance, "The Wait" bears a striking resemblance in its opening piano work to the style of Amos' "Little Earthquakes."

Schrock does keep it interesting, though, with inflections of blues and gospel occasionally throughout the music. Her stark lyrics also keep the songs interesting.

"Dames Rocket" sounds like the prequel to a successful career, with a little luck. Schrock obviously has the talent and, with the right guidance, this is a singer who at least could get some national attention.

MOVIE REVIEW BY JJ DUNCAN

Strong acting, storyline make movie enjoyable

Brad Pitt and Julia Roberts team up with loads of charisma in the action/comedy "The Mexican" and drive halfway across the nation. One is in search of a mythical firearm; the other is in search of answers to their troubled relationship.

The title refers to an expensive, mysterious pistol that is in the hands of the wrong person, and Pitt's character, Jerry, is dispatched to Mexico to find and retrieve it for his mafia-esque boss. Much to the chagrin of his girlfriend, Samantha (Roberts), he leaves just when a good argument between the two is heating up, and she goes off to find him.

While Jerry faces numerous perils in trying to get the gun, Samantha is kidnapped by a hitman, Leroy (James Gandolfini, of "The Sopranos"), while he, in turn, is pursued by yet another hitman who wants to get his hands on the prized relic. The chase ends up with an altogether surprising ending.

There are so many things that work for this movie. Pitt and Roberts bicker and moan throughout the entire movie like any real couple. Gandolfini's ultra-sensitive persona will draw laughs because of his menacing presence, and there are hilarious moments with Pitt trying to speak and connect with several Spanish-speaking natives of Mexico.

The actual tale of the pistol dates back to the 19th century, and the flashbacks are well done in drab colors, not entirely black and white, so that the color scheme is unique.

One of the best things about the movie, though, is that the plot is simple and doesn't make a huge statement. It is a old-fashioned story about a wild chase for lost treasure, with a few twists and turns. Audiences will be able to appreciate the simplicity of the storyline and will be able to laugh as well.

Fans and non-fans of Pitt and Roberts alike will applaud their performances and will enjoy just the right combination of action and comedy that makes "The Mexican" a fun, exciting story.

The sidewalk largely is the effort of Graduates Investing In Tomorrow, or GIFT, a program of the KSU Foundation.

Holly Serk, co-chair of GIFT and sophomore in microbiology, said it's a way of honoring the graduates.

"It's basically a way to honor a graduate and give back to the university," Serk said.

The contribution of $50 is used to purchase the stone and for maintenance on the sidewalk, and the remaining $25 then goes to the graduate's college or student life, depending on what the graduate specifies, Serk said.

The 4- by 8-inch stones now take up a portion of the sidewalk in front of Memorial Stadium, and the sidewalk is expected to travel up toward Ahearn Field House, move through the Union Plaza, then proceed through mid-campus and stop in front of Waters Hall.

Valerie Kircher, co-chair of GIFT and senior in architectural engineering, said purchasing a brick is not limited to undergraduates.

"We are pushing for new graduates, vet med, masters, Ph.D., anyone getting a degree from K-State," Kircher said.

Wefald said he thinks it is fitting that the sidewalk will lead into campus.

"It's going to be a staircase into Kansas State," Wefald said.

Wefald also said the idea of seniors giving gifts has been lost over the years and that the sidewalk is a part of that idea.

"The idea of a gift faded into the night," he said.

"This is a resurrection of a concept that goes back to before World War I. It also kick-starts students contributing to their alma mater," Wefald said.

Student Body President Jake Worcester said that by getting a brick, students begin giving back to the university.

"Students really are the heart and soul of the university, and this is really the first opportunity we have to start giving back," Worcester said.

CUTS

"With the combination of those four things, it is going to be very difficult to sustain what we're doing at the university with this budget."

Prior to the proposed budget cut, K-State was receiving only 55 cents of every dollar surrounding states' universities were receiving, Wefald said.

"Even in the best of times, we were not getting the type of funding that other universities were," he said.

"However, we were still able to achieve at a high rate because of the excellent people we have in place here at K-State."

Under Graves' proposed budget cuts, K-State would have to trim $5 million from the next school year's budget. If the proposal is passed, four facets of the university might contribute to the cuts, Wefald said.

"The first is the budget cut of $2.1 million," he said. "That is going to hit us hard."

There also might be a $1 million loss due to the elimination of the state match for technology improvements. Under this plan, the state would match, dollar for dollar, anything the university contributed toward technology funds.

"If the elimination of the equipment funds goes through," Wefald said, "there is obviously going to be some hardship placed on the community of K-State. That dollar match was very important to us."

In addition, the budget office would eliminate the first three steps of classified workers, resulting in only one classified worker designation. Wefald said K-State would be forced to hire fewer workers and would lose another $400,000.

"Basically, they are saying we have to bump up their pay salaries right away," Wefald said. "But they are not going to compensate us for it. We are going to have to eat that money."

The university also has utility overruns totaling $1.5 million this year, Wefald said.

"If prices stay the same, that amount moves into the next fiscal year," he said.

In response, K-State has imposed a hiring freeze. Provost James Coffman said two-thirds of the 100 vacancies at the university would not be filled.

"We have to impose the freeze until we know the magnitude of the cut for sure," Coffman said. "If it goes through as proposed, then the dean of each college and I will sit down and work on filling priority positions. However, we are hopeful that this is temporary and we are able to fill the positions that will immediately affect students' course requirements."

Student Body President Jake Worcester said not being able to fill priority positions will affect students.

"We can't offer the classes next fall that we offer now with the hiring freeze in place," Worcester said. "I think a lot of students will find themselves needing classes they can't get into if the proposed budget cuts make it through. We can't offer the level of education that we do at K-State without that money."

Worcester said the elimination of the technology fee would hurt the university's ability to move forward.

Graves' proposal

Gov. Bill Graves' proposal to cut $5 million in university funding might come from the following areas:

- Budget cuts — $2.1 million
- Utility overruns — $1.5 million
- Loss of technology funding — $1 million
- Increase in faculty and staff salaries — $400,000

Source: K-State President Jon Wefald

"Technology is very vital to a student's education," he said. "If we don't have that match money we will not be able to improve and enhance what we offer in that area. It will seriously hurt our ability to progress as a university."

However, Wefald said he is remaining relatively optimistic about the proposed budget cuts.

"I am confident that we will get some, if not most, of that money back," he said. "We are working around the clock, seven days a week, to work through the proposed cuts because we can't have excellence without proper funding."

COLLEGIAN VOTERS' GUIDE

March 5, 2001

President Jon Wefald is asking all students to vote this week in the Student Governing Association elections. Voting starts today. EVAN SEMON/Collegian

I WANT YOU TO VOTE THIS WEEK

Election officials hope for high voter turnout

By AMY MORGAN
Kansas State Collegian

Students should get involved in the election process, said Dustin Petrik, Student Senate elections chair.

He said it is important that students vote in the SGA elections because those elected to positions will represent K-State before the Kansas Board of Regents, K-State and the Kansas Legislature.

"Every student should have a stake and a part in the election," Petrik said.

Dana Pracht, student body vice president, said she encourages students to vote.

"Students should look at what concerns them about student government and campus issues at this time and take a look at the candidate's viewpoints and why they are running," Pracht said.

"There are a large number of candidates, especially presidential and vice presidential, with issues that heightens students' interest," Pracht said. "Voting is one way voices can be heard."

The general election voting will be today through Wednesday and will give the K-State student body a chance to tally their votes for the next wave of student leaders on campus.

K-State voter turnout during SGA elections last year totaled 18 percent, a higher figure than had been seen in the last several years, Petrik said.

He said that in the past, the voter turnout had been at about 12 to 15 percent.

Pracht said she thinks the increase in voter turnout in the last election was a result of the accessibility online voting created, and she said she is excited to be doing it that way again this year.

"We still realize that we want that number to be greater," Pracht said.

All general election voting will be online. Students can vote at their home computers or at any university computing labs.

They also can vote on a computer set aside exclusively for SGA election voting in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union.

Online voting began at 7 this morning and will be available 24 hours a day through 5 p.m. Wednesday.

The computer set aside for voting in the OSAS will be open to voters from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. today through Wednesday.

Petrik said that when voting, students should make sure to follow directions and vote only for the allotted number of candidates.

If voters mark more than the allotted number, their ballots will be void and will not be included in the election tally. People also will be available at OSAS to answer any questions voters might have while they vote, he said.

The result totals instantly will be generated by the election vendor, Validity Systems, a company based out of Seattle.

The results will be provided to SGA through a secured Web site that only election officials will have access to, Petrik said.

The Election Committee then will determine the number of votes for each candidate and the winner of each race, he said.

Where to vote

All general election voting will take place online. Students can use:

- home computers
- university computer labs
- a computer in OSAS on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union

Times: Online voting began 7 this morning and will be available 24 hours a day through 5 p.m. Wednesday. The computer set aside for voting in the OSAS will be open to voters from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. today through Wednesday.

To vote: Go to the K-State Web site, www.ksu.edu, and log on to KAYS. Students will be given a random voter registration number that will link them to a ballot for their particular college.

Results: Election results will be announced 8 p.m. Wednesday on the SGA Web site at www.ksu.edu/osas/sga. Also, check the eCollegian at www.k-statecollegian.com for updates.

Presidential and vice presidential candidates

BARKER KAUFMAN

President: Kyle Barker, junior in public relations
Vice president: Brandon Kauffman, junior in political science

In 20 words or fewer, what do you think is the most important issue facing your college or organization?

We feel that mandatory rental inspections are important at K-State, affecting students who live off-campus.

In 20 words or fewer, what makes you more qualified than your opponents to serve this position?

We have an innovative and sincere way of looking at the issues that affect students at K-State.

In 20 words or fewer, what goals do you hope to accomplish if in this position?

We hope to put our platform issues into motion and allow the students a more educated choice in decisions made.

THE PLATFORM

Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman are looking for a new generation of leadership at K-State. They said they want to see a focus on smaller, realistic goals that directly affect members of the student body. However, Barker and Kauffman said they don't just want to see this new generation — they want to be the new generation.

Barker-Kauffman's campaign, "Small steps, big changes," focuses on four key platform issues. First, the pair wants to establish a more lengthy and formal freshman orientation program. Their proposed plan would encourage prospective students to visit the K-State campus for a four or five-day program to show them the resources offered by the university.

Their second platform issue is related to the university's dead week policy.

Under an ideal dead week, professors would not be permitted to schedule tests or projects during the week prior to final exams each semester.

Kauffman said he and Barker want to inform faculty of the week's benefits.

Barker-Kauffman's third issue focuses on decreasing the number of night tests given by professors. Their concerns rest on the safety of students and the tests' conflicts with students' schedules.

The pair has proposed that tests in classes such as Biology and College Algebra be given during students' recitation times.

The candidates' fourth issue focuses on establishing a uniform wait list policy for the university. They said they feel the problem involves different professors having different methods of allowing students into full classes.

The candidates also said that if rental inspections proposal passes in the city of Manhattan, they eventually would like to distribute informational booklets to students about housing concerns.

HOPPER ENGEL

President: Ben Hopper, senior in agricultural communications
Vice president: Eric Engel, senior in electrical engineering

In 20 words or fewer, what do you think is the most important issue facing your college or organization?

Improving the quality of education by increasing the availability of technology, improving advising and making classrooms better equipped.

In 20 words or fewer, what makes you more qualified than your opponents to serve this position?

We have a fresh approach, an intense dedication and a passion for serving K-State.

In 20 words or fewer, what goals do you hope to accomplish if in this position?

We will work to improve technology, create an appreciation for diversity, assist student organizations and improve the quality of education.

THE PLATFORM

Technology, diversity, increased funding for sports clubs and classroom improvements are some of Ben Hopper and Eric Engel's goals for K-State's future.

Hopper-Engel's "How You Do It?" campaign focuses on listening and learning to students, Engel said.

One of the ways both Hopper and Engel want to help students is by improving K-State's technology. K-State might be able to receive an OCS, which would increase the megabytes-per-second transfer rate when using the Internet from 45 to 155, therefore increasing the size of the bandwidth. The candidates want to work to bring this equipment to K-State, so there will be an increase in the speed and quality of the Internet usage.

Another issue the two are addressing is diversity. Bringing different students, clubs and organizations together from all areas of campus will create more ideas and solutions for K-State, Hopper said.

Increased funding for sports clubs is a priority for the candidates. Hopper and Engel said they want to increase sports clubs' funding from the Student Governing Association, which they said has been slighted during the past few years, to help them better represent K-State. There would be no increase in the student privilege fees, they said, because this money already exists.

Dry-erase boards, chalk boards, overhead projectors and clocks are some of the classroom items needed for improving the quality of a student's education, Hopper said. The candidates' platform includes solutions to make sure all of K-State's classrooms are equipped with necessary items.

KARIMI AMOS

President: Ali Karimi, junior in social sciences
Vice president: Fidel Amos, freshman in open-option

In 20 words or fewer, what do you think is the most important issue facing your college or organization?

Everyday student life. Things that you will see everyday, not once in awhile.

In 20 words or fewer, what makes you more qualified than your opponents to serve this position?

We are in touch with the student body. The majority of campus is jaded. We're trying to bring them back.

In 20 words or fewer, what goals do you hope to accomplish if in this position?

All 10 of our goals can be accomplished, unlike everyone else. Viva La Resistencia.

THE PLATFORM

Ali Karimi and Fidel Amos have voices to be heard.

Their slogan is "Viva La Resistencia," meaning fighting the strongest forces to support the weakest.

The first issue they want to address is classroom updates and comfort. Karimi and Amos said they would like to have clocks placed in every room, and they support a comfortable work or study environment. That means increasing the air flow by either placing fans in every room or updating the heating and cooling systems. Also falling under this category is putting higher quality toilet paper in restrooms.

Parking is their second issue. Karimi and Amos said they agree there is no one solution to fighting the chaos.

Both said they support having the meters checked on a regular basis and putting a time frame on the amount of tickets that can be issued for the same violation.

Utilizing the university's television stations also is on the agenda. Karimi and Amos said they would like to see more sporting events, speeches and even the SGA debates televised.

The team supports the idea of having a student concert every year.

This concert would be during the spring semester. It would include music bands, vendors and booths set up by different campus organizations.

To finance the event, Karimi said the university would ask Pepsi-Cola to be a sponsor, and some of the university's excess money could be used. Plus, Karimi said, local businesses would become involved and help support the event.

Karimi and Amos said funding for their proposed issues would come from the university's budget surplus.

To enact new parking policies, the team said they would discuss options with Parking Services.

LENKNER BOSCO

President: Travis Lenkner, senior in print journalism and pre-law
Vice president: Mary Bosco, senior in public relations

In 20 words or fewer, what do you think is the most important issue facing your college or organization?

Students should expect more from their president and vice-president — not single-issue leadership, but a dedication to fulfilling promises.

In 20 words or fewer, what makes you more qualified than your opponents to serve this position?

We have experience in student government and other campus organizations and can use that knowledge to make effective change.

In 20 words or fewer, what goals do you hope to accomplish if in this position?

We will accomplish our platform goals, but students also can expect us to be visible and responsive to their concerns.

THE PLATFORM

Travis Lenkner and Mary Bosco are campaigning for the student body presidency and vice presidency, and they want students to "Expect more."

The campaign centers around four issues.

The platform calls for increased uses of the Wildcat ID Card, expanding the use of its smart chip. Bosco said this would make it a universal card for every students' needs on campus and in Manhattan.

The platform also calls for Options for Safe Transportation, a service that would be part of the city's transportation program.

Lenkner and Bosco also said they support a SafeRide program as a part of the issue. The pair would work to see that a citywide transportation program is passed.

If it does not pass, a second option would be to seek outside or corporate sponsorship in order to cut down on potential student fees created by SafeRide.

The pair also is focusing on nighttime safety. Bosco said that right now, there is nothing addressing this issue — not even taxi cab numbers in bars.

A universal system for waiting lists is another issue the campaign would address. Lenkner said students need a universal system of getting into classes. Under the potential plan, students waiting for a class would be notified when an opening becomes available.

Another issue on the platform is the increased promotion of campus events. The two said campus events are not well publicized now, and a central location for information is necessary. An improved university calendar, they said, would benefit students.

While the campaign focuses on the four core issues, Lenkner and Bosco said they will continue to do more.

They also will work in the state Legislature and on campus to represent the students' needs.

WOOTEN SHEA

President: Rick Wooten, senior in television and radio
Vice president: Aaron Shea, senior in secondary education

In 20 words or fewer, what do you think is the most important issue facing your college or organization?

Rick and I believe that the students need more representation from their student government. That is why we support referendums.

In 20 words or fewer, what makes you more qualified than your opponents to serve this position?

We have been at this university for a few years. We have invested heavily in this institution. We try hard.

In 20 words or fewer, what goals do you hope to accomplish if in this position?

We hope to open the Student Senate up to more diversity. We want to use university resources to promote events.

THE PLATFORM

Rick Wooten and Aaron Shea are hoping the third try will be the charm.

This is the third year the duo has run for office. They said running was a good way to get involved and learn about the other candidates on a first-hand basis.

The candidates' main issue is campaign finance reform.

Lowering the legal spending limit would open elections up to more diverse groups — not just people whose families have money, Shea said.

The candidates only spent a total of $40 for their two previous campaigns.

This year, they said they planned on spending nothing. Any money donated to their campaign will be donated to charity, Wooten said.

They said they would like to see opportunities for more diverse representation in Student Senate.

They said they hope to achieve this by opening up positions to living groups like the residence halls.

Wooten said he believes Student Senate is an aristocracy. He said students bring out ideas they couldn't possibly meet, such as the proposed student activities center that failed in a November student referendum.

The pair said they were glad a referendum was used, and that they support the use of referendums as a means of gauging student opinion.

The pair said they would encourage representatives to keep in contact with their constituents through e-mail or other means.

Wooten said if he could do anything to improve K-State, he would put more books in Hale Library.

He also said if he could do anything to improve the city of Manhattan, he would improve housing.

PRESIDENT/VICE PRESIDENT

The student body president serves as the chief executive for the Student Governing Association.

The president's responsibilities include voicing problems and concerns of the K-State student body to Faculty Senate, the Kansas State Board of Regents and the Legislature.

The president meets with the regents once a month in Topeka.

Other presidential duties include traveling, attending speaking engagements, participating in fund-raisers, attending administrative meetings and functions, appointing students to different committees and attending various meetings.

The president also has the power to veto bills and resolutions passed by Student Senate.

The vice president has the second-highest position in Student Senate.

The vice president serves as chief executive of SGA if the president is unable to fulfill his or her duties, whether because of illness or resignation. The vice president also is the chair of the Educational Opportunity Fund Committee.

The vice president oversees and coordinates special SGA projects and programs, assists the president in appointing cabinet members and serves as liaison between the vice president of institutional advancement and SGA.

STUDENT PUBLICATIONS

The Board of Student Publications oversees the policies and issues of all student publications.

Five elected members, two faculty members, the director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, and representatives from the Royal Purple, the K-State Collegian and the Student Publications Advertising Department make up the board.

The board hires editors in chief for the Collegian and the RP. They also hire the advertising sales manager for both publications on a semester basis.

The board also manages finances for the Collegian and RP and approves the budget.

STUDENT SENATE

Student Senate is the legislative body and voice for K-State students. Senate consists of 60 representatives, and each person represents each individual college.

Two faculty members also serve on Student Senate, while three students serve on Faculty Senate.

Standing committees are also a part of Student Senate. Committees include the Operations Committee, which tallies senator absences and makes sure Senate runs smoothly; the Academic Affairs and University Relations Committee, which is responsible for all academic issues on campus; the Student Affairs and Social Services committee, which deals with issues pertaining to student life, student representation and services; the Governmental Relations Committee, which lobbies state and local governments to address student concerns; and the Communications Committee, which serves as a Senate public relations group.

They allocate funds to student groups and services, such as Lafene Student Health Center and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, through the privilege fees.

Student Senate writes legislation, looks over recommendations and maintains contact with the Kansas Board of Regents.

Senators also enact policies for the student body, charter college councils and committees of Student Senate and define and establish the Student Conduct Code.

UNION GOVERNING BOARD

The Union Governing Board focuses on issues that concern the K-State Student Union.

UGB has 15 voting members. It is composed of 12 students and three faculty members. Five of the positions are up for election. Non-elected members are appointed by the student body president, Student Alumni Board, Student Senate and other organizations.

UGB decides whether something follows policy or goes against it. It deals with overall issues concerning the Union. Fiscal issues also are handled by UGB and reviewed annually.

FINE ARTS COUNCIL

The Fine Arts Council gives money to fine arts departments when they need or request funds.

It also allocates money to fine arts student groups such as the Potter's Guild. Each semester, student groups must submit an application in order to receive funding.

There is a set budget for the recipients, which include the departments of Music, Art, Speech communication, Theatre and Dance, and English, as well as McCain Auditorium.

Nine students serve on the council, five of whom are elected by the student body, and eight faculty members represent the departments.

Four of the students are appointed by Senate and two are appointed by the student body president.

The appointed members serve on the council for one year. Two of the elected members serve two-year terms, while the other three elected members serve one-year terms.

How Many Votes Can You Cast?

Below is a list of the maximum number of votes each student is allowed. Students do not have to cast all their votes.

No response.

agriculture senate — RYAN "PUFFY" GARRETT freshman in agricultural economics

GARRETT

In 20 words or fewer, what do you think is the most important issue facing your college or organization?

Being able to keep up with the rapid advancements and changes in agriculture.

In 20 words or fewer, what makes you more qualified than your opponents to serve this position?

I'm not running to add another activity on my resume. I want to be involved within my college, university.

In 20 words or fewer, what goals do you hope to accomplish if in this position?

Fix our current parking situation because I am sick of hearing people complain about it.

agriculture senate — DELVIN HIGGINSON sophomore in milling science and agricultural economics

HIGGINSON

In 20 words or fewer, what do you think is the most important issue facing your college or organization?

Funding for future expansions and new facilities should continue, but efforts to renovate and update should be just as important.

In 20 words or fewer, what makes you more qualified than your opponents to serve this position?

I'm a political outsider, so I still have common sense, logic and reasoning.

In 20 words or fewer, what goals do you hope to accomplish if in this position?

Focus on solving current student problems first (parking, facility conditions, etc.) before allocating funds to future "visionary" projects.

agriculture senate — CADE RENSINK junior in animal sciences and industry

RENSINK

No response.

agriculture senate — CODY STUBOR junior in agricultural economics

STUBOR

In 20 words or fewer, what do you think is the most important issue facing your college or organization?

The College of Agriculture needs to be allocated more money for clubs/organizations and judging teams.

In 20 words or fewer, what makes you more qualified than your opponents to serve this position?

I have served and gained experience while serving on student senate and the allocations committee last year.

In 20 words or fewer, what goals do you hope to accomplish if in this position?

Making sure that decisions made in student senate are good for the university and most importantly, the College of Agriculture.

agriculture senate — JILL WENGER sophomore in agricultural economics

In 20 words or fewer, what do you think is the most important issue facing your college or organization?

An important issue facing the College of Agriculture is to inform other students and the general public about our industry.

In 20 words or fewer, what makes you more qualified than your opponents to serve this position?

I have served as a senate intern, allowing me to learn about, experience and understand the senate system and processes.

In 20 words or fewer, what goals do you hope to accomplish if in this position?

As Senator, I would work to better inform students of the issues facing and happenings of their senate.

Spending stays below former cap

By CRISTINA JANNEY
Kansas State Collegian

Removal of campaign spending caps did not substantially change the amount student government candidates spent on this year's election.

All five student body presidential candidates spent less than the former cap of $3,000.

Travis Lenkner spent the most, with $2,647. Kyle Barker spent $1,932, and Ben Hopper spent $1,769. Rick Wooten and Ali Karimi both spent nothing on their campaigns.

Lenkner said the new campaign regulations worked as intended.

"You can't buy an election," he said. "You take your ideas out to the students. They can contribute or choose not to contribute their money."

Dustin Petrik, Student Senate Elections chair, said the new regulations bring student government in line with local state and federal governments.

Limiting the amount of money candidates can spend is limiting their freedom of speech, he said. Another issue is students' freedom to support the candidates they choose.

"They can raise and spend money if they have support for themselves and their issues," Petrik said.

The two candidates who campaigned on campaign finance reform said the spending gap put them at a definite disadvantage.

"I'm not trying to outspend anybody. That is not the point of the election," Karimi said. "Ideas are free."

Wooten and Karimi said they used more cost-effective ways of campaigning, like participating in debates and talking with students.

Karimi said he would like to see the spending regulations changed to reflect those at Wichita State University, which limits its candidates to $1,000.

"I can't compete. I chose not to compete," he said. "I choose to make a statement."

Hopper said he agreed that a spending cap should be reinstated.

"I think some students don't run because they don't have the money or couldn't raise

"IT IS A REALITY THAT WE ARE LIVING WITH." SEARCH FOR ANSWERS Gunman kills 2, injures 13 in school shooting

By BEN FOX
The Associated Press

SANTEE, Calif. — A 15-year-old freshman opened fire at his high school Monday, killing two youths and wounding 13 other people, authorities said. One witness said the youth smiled as he fired.

One person was dead at the scene and 14 others were injured, Santee Fire Department spokesman Jeff Fehlberg said. Later, a second victim died at Grossmont Hospital. It was the largest number of dead and wounded in a school shooting since the Columbine tragedy nearly two years ago.

Both of the dead were juveniles, and at least two of those shot were campus supervisors at Santana High School, Sheriff William Kolender said.

The suspect, a ninth-grader, was apprehended.

Student John Schardt said he was in a nearby classroom when the shooting started at about 9:20 a.m. in a nearby boys room.

"I looked at the kid, and he was smiling and shooting his weapon," Schardt said.

"It was total chaos. People were trying to take cover," Schardt said.

Neil O'Grady said the suspect had talked to him and other friends over the weekend about a shooting at the school, but they didn't believe him.

"He was telling us how he was going to bring a gun to school ... but we thought he was joking," O'Grady said. "We were like, 'Yeah, right.'"

The suspect recently had two skateboards stolen from him, O'Grady said.

"He always gets picked on; he's scrawny. He's little," O'Grady said. "People think he's dumb."

Another friend of the suspect, Joshua Stevens, was questioned by authorities because of things the suspect had told him, said Chris Reynolds, the boyfriend of Stevens' mother.

Reynolds said the suspect had talked about bringing a gun to school when he spent the night at their house Saturday. Reynolds said he didn't think the boy was serious.

"I'm upset with myself for not doing anything," Reynolds said. "I made a bad choice."

One deputy was teaching a class at the time of the shooting and was at the site within moments, Kolender said.

Students were escorted to a nearby shopping center. Television images showed a parking lot full of students and parents milling anxiously while paramedics took away the injured. Classes were canceled for Tuesday and counselors would be available, officials said.

Another student, Alicia Zimmer, told KGTV she didn't see the shooter, but she did see a girl with blood on her arm and another with blood on her hands and a boy lying face down on the floor.

George W. Bush called the shooting a "disgraceful act of cowardice" and said the best prevention is to teach children right from wrong.

Santee, a town of 59,000 residents, is about 10 miles northeast of San Diego. Santana High, which opened in 1965, has more than 1,900 students in grades nine through 12.

On April 20, 1999, two students at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colo., killed 12 students and a teacher and wounded 23 before killing themselves. It was the worst of a string of mass shootings at schools that shocked the nation.

Local schools evaluate policies, security issues

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

A shooting at a California high school left those in the local K-12 education community looking for answers and discussing methods of prevention.

Bob Seymour, associate superintendent of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said the incident at the Santee, Calif., school is difficult to understand.

"These incidents are a terrible tragedy, and our hearts go out to the parents, students and administrators," Seymour said. "It is hard to fathom these type of occurrences, but it is a reality that we are living with."

As a result of recent acts of violence in schools, the school district has refined its crisis prevention plan, said Angie Cohorst director of communication for the district. The refining gave schools in the district a universal policy.

The plan is part of a second-step program that urges prevention and students to communicate. It also makes students aware of the problem by providing a state hotline on school violence, a program that was implemented in 1999 at the urging of the state Legislature.

"I think a key is to make sure students know their responsibilities — to let somebody know that this might happen," Seymour said. "There might be many false alarms, but that one real one that is prevented would make all the false alarms worth it."

Kathy Toelkes, a public information officer for the Kansas State Board of Education, said the calls to the hotline go into a state dispatcher and then are dispatched throughout the state informing local law enforcement agencies. Toelkes said the program has

Wooten faces SGA election complaints

By BRYAN SCRIBNER & NANCY FOSTER
Kansas State Collegian

The Collegian filed a complaint against student body presidential candidate Rick Wooten on Monday and plans to file a second one this morning.

The first Student Governing Association complaint said Wooten, who was a columnist for the newspaper in fall 2000, entered the Collegian newsroom at approximately 8:30 p.m. Sunday and violated newsroom policy. Wooten opened and printed a story about pending alcohol-related criminal charges filed against him before the story was published. It was published in Monday's Collegian.

After Wooten learned of a story being written about the complaint, he again accessed Collegian files against policy. He obtained a copy of the story and forwarded it to other presidential candidates. The Collegian was notified Monday of the forwarded e-mail, and later it was e-mailed by Wooten himself.

The Collegian was informed he was showing others the story he obtained Sunday at the KSDB-FM 91.9 presidential debate Sunday.

"The entire staff is angry and feels violated," Sarah Bahari, Collegian editor in chief, said. "The Collegian is looking into what possible legal action can be taken against him."

The Collegian is looking into whether any laws were broken in his actions both Sunday and Monday. Dustin Petrik, Student Senate Elections chair, is investigating whether Wooten's actions violate election guidelines.

Wooten told the Collegian he accessed its files from a computer outside of the newsroom during a Monday night class. In an e-mail to Bahari, he stated: "Nobody needs to go to the Collegian newsroom to find these files unless they don't want to climb the stairs. So once again I have read an article about me, this time without breaking your rule of entering the Collegian newsroom. You have bitten off more than you can chew in pursuing and exploiting this matter. I wish you luck."

Vet Med affected by budget cuts

By CAMILLE BOISSEAU
Kansas State Collegian

A hiring freeze on open positions is the main effect the proposed budget cuts will have on the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Ralph Richardson, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said the college will fulfill commitments that already were made for job positions but will handle the others from case to case.

The College of Veterinary Medicine is dealing with a $225,000 budget cut and a $48,000 technology cut, Richardson said.

"This should not affect the students," Richardson said. "It will affect the work of existing teachers we have, and they will have to cover more responsibilities."

M.M. Chengappa, head of the Department of Diagnostic Medicine/Pathobiology, said the budget cuts will have an effect on services and research the college offers. The college will have to prioritize its activities.

Chengappa said the services offered to outside clients might be the ones that are scaled down.

"I look at the budget cut as a short-term effect."

News of the weird

In February, according to police in Fayetteville, Ga., after a youth basketball game (7- and 8-year-olds) that featured much bickering by a coach over referee Oliver Lewis Wood's "bad calls," the referee pulled out a knife and stabbed the coach. The referee, who is a Baptist minister by day, was arrested; the coach, who is a county marshal by day, needed 17 stitches.

KU cuts men's tennis, swimming programs

LAWRENCE — The University of Kansas will cut its men's tennis and swimming programs because of tight budgets, school officials say. The school also announced the Oct. 20 "Border War" game with the Missouri football team won't be played at Arrowhead Stadium, even though the Kansas athletic department could have used the money.

Kansas Athletics Director Bob Frederick said moving the game to the larger stadium would have provided only a temporary financial boost.

Frederick said one reason for cutting men's swimming and tennis are travel expenses, which have increased by 115 percent since the Big 12 was formed in 1996. The school also cited increased scholarship costs, which have cost nearly $1 million over the last three years.

Frederick said he met with Chancellor Robert Hemenway last Thursday, and that Hemenway approved dropping the two sports and starting a donor seating plan to raise more money.

By cutting the men's tennis and swimming programs, Frederick said Kansas could reduce its budget by about $3.6 million over the next five years. The athletic department's annual budget is about $23 million.

Four K-State students were nominated for the Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship, which honors excellence in research in the fields of math, natural science and engineering. Dawn Dechand, Justin Dyer, Trevor Fast and Elizabeth Richardson are competing for one of the 300 scholarships to be awarded nationally each year.

Three K-State students faced tough competition when competing to be finalists for the Harry S. Truman Scholarship, announced February 2001.

Keen Umbehr, junior in political science; Jared Rose, junior in political science and Jonathan Künche, senior in physics, were the 2001 K-State Truman scholar nominees. The students were nominated by a committee of Manhattan community and faculty members last spring.

Computer improvements prevent online voting problems

By REBECCA MARTIN
Kansas State Collegian

As the first day of Student Governing Association elections got under way, officials said students should have no problem voting online.

Last year, some K-State computers could not support the security necessary for voting because their version of Netscape Navigator was too old.

"The problems we faced last year should be in the past," said Bill Harlan, Senate Operations Committee chair. The committee oversees the election committee.

Harlan said computers had to download a special program to vote last year. He said that this year, the voting program was obtained from a different vendor, which should eliminate problems.

Dustin Petrik, Student Senate elections chair, said the program had been tested on Netscape 3.0 and higher to find and correct problems and prevent cheating in the voting process.

Preventing the online voting problems that occurred last year was especially important in this election since paper ballots will only be allowed for students who have enrolled at K-State in the last month.

"We've already generated a list of what students are eligible to vote one month ago," Petrik said.

Petrik said students enrolled after the list was generated will need to go to the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union to get a paper ballot. All other students will need to vote online.

A computer is set up for voting in the OSAS for students who want to stop and vote in the Union.

Early Monday morning, the computer in the office did not allow the voting program to run.

Petrik said the browser originally did not have the necessary security certificate to run the program but had since been updated and was working fine. He said Mike Stauffer, assistant director of Student Information and Self Service Systems, assured him the university computing labs are compliant with the voting system's requirements.

Harvard Townsend, director of Computer and Networking Services, said he agreed with Stauffer.

"There shouldn't be any problem," Townsend said. "The version of Web browsers we offer in the University Computing Labs meet the requirements specified by the vendor of the election system that SGA contracted to use."

Townsend also said that since last year, the university had added another Web browser, Microsoft's Internet Explorer, to the lab computers, in addition to upgrading the Netscape browser to a newer version.

"We also replaced all computers in the labs with new Gateway computers, so the performance is much better," Townsend said. "Students should have no problem finding a place to vote this year."

Petrik said students voting from home might encounter difficulties, but that they can download a higher version of the browser and vote using the updated system.

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian

Vote today for student body president and vice president in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union or from a computer elsewhere by logging onto KATS. The polls are open 24 hours a day online until 5 p.m. Wednesday.

Theta Xi earns national award

By ALISON VRTISKA
Kansas State Collegian

K-State's Theta Xi chapter received national recognition as the top Theta Xi chapter in the nation.

The Theta Xi Memorial Trophy is awarded to the chapter that demonstrates excellence in a variety of categories, including community service, academics and financial stability.

"It is the highest honor given to a chapter by our national fraternity," said Jared Rose, president and junior in political science. "Academic success, intramural competition, philanthropic efforts, house brotherhood and financial stability are among the criteria looked at in choosing the winner."

The award is based on benchmarks of excellence. The benchmarks are assigned a point value. Points are awarded in many different areas such as the number of active members and the accuracy of reports turned in after the spring semester.

The president and secretary spend a week after the spring semester assembling the many pages of details to be turned in to national headquarters for judging. K-State's Theta Xi fraternity consistently has been a top competitor for this award for years, receiving the trophy eight out of the last 12 years.

"The awards have been a driving force for our house," Spencer Steljes, sophomore in business administration, said. "We set out to be the best in whatever we do, whether it is to be first in grades or to have good communication on campus or to become first in the nation. There is no reason why we shouldn't be the best because we work very hard."

The academic excellence of Theta Xi is apparent on K-State's campus as well. The fraternity has been first in grades 19 out of the last 20 semesters. Rose said he attributes the success of Theta Xi to the K-State community.

"Kansas State's greek system is full of chapters that are among the best in the nation for their respective fraternities," Rose said.

"Traditionally, Theta Xi at KSU finishes first or second in the Memorial Trophy competition, and a large part of this success is the incredibly supportive atmosphere provided for greek houses at KSU."

The fraternity continues to work toward the memorial trophy, knowing the rest of the competition is doing the same, he said.

"Benchmarks are the most important thing that we try to accomplish," Derek Carlson secretary and freshman in elementary education, said. "Each year we are neck-in-neck with (the Theta Xi chapter at) University of California at Davis. We harp on trying to win. It is one of our priorities."

Cheney suffers more chest pains

By RON FOURNIER
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Vice President Dick Cheney, who has had four heart attacks, was taken to a hospital Monday as a precautionary measure after feeling chest pains.

Cheney, 60, suffered a heart attack in late November but quickly resumed a full schedule after an operation to fix a blocked artery.

One of his heart arteries was 90-percent blocked, so doctors implanted a wire scaffolding-like device called a stent to push away the blockage and prop open the artery walls.

It was his fourth heart attack since he was 37. In 1988, he had quadruple bypass surgery to clear clogged arteries.

Cheney went to the hospital Thursday after suffering mild chest pains, aides said.

Adviser Mary Matalin said he was undergoing a cardiac catheterization at George Washington University Hospital to determine what was causing the chest pains.

"They're going in to take a look," she said. "Details to follow."

In her statement, Matalin said Cheney checked himself into the hospital for a repeat cardiac catheterization after experiencing two brief, mild episodes of chest discomfort. This is a non-emergency precautionary procedure. An EKG obtained at the White House this afternoon was unchanged from one obtained last Thursday.

In a telephone interview, Matalin said the EKG last week was part of a normal followup to the heart attack Cheney suffered late last year.

She said Cheney reported the discomfort to his doctor, who advised the vice president to have the new procedure done.

After his last heart attack, Cheney's doctors said the accumulation of disease had left his heart moderately damaged. Other heart experts said Cheney was at higher risk for further heart attacks than the average person his age and he needed to take such protective steps as losing weight.

Cheney, in November, revealed his blood pressure was an excellent 106 over 80. He was taking cholesterol-lowering medicine that had kept his total cholesterol level around a good 170, he said. However, he didn't reveal levels of so-called bad cholesterol and triglycerides, more important than total cholesterol counts.

Asked if he feared another heart attack, Cheney said: "I don't operate that way. ... I look forward to several more years."

A few days after his November heart attack, Cheney demonstrated his back-to-business mindset when he responded to questions about his health by jumping up and down and pumping his arms.

532-0732 • letters@pub.ksu.edu

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics relevant to the publication.

On the Topic

Do you support the scope of President Bush's tax cut?

I support Bush's tax cut, but I don't support both parties spending millions to promote their plan. Kind of redundant, don't you think?

As an economist, I just wanted to say that Bush's tax plan is a bad idea for us students. We need the national debt to be paid down, which will lower interest rates for student loans, car loans and mortgages. Unless you have enough money to buy your own house, it is going to hurt you.

President Bush has cost me my job. Thank you, government tax cuts.

Off the Topic

K-State learns how to win close games. Watch out, Big 12. Here comes Coach Wooldridge.

To the singers of the opera "Tender Land," I want to say "Congratulations." I am sure you sang well, I just couldn't hear you over the extremely loud and out-of-tune orchestra.

All this politically correct crap has got to stop.

A minor miracle has occurred in Manhattan. Seth Childs Cinema is playing, "Crouching Tiger: Hidden Dragon." Everyone, get out and support foreign films.

How is it that the people who spent a month destroying our campus by tying trash to our trees and putting graffiti on our sidewalks now want us to vote for them on the basis that they care more about our campus than anybody else?

Will there be a recount after the election?

Why do we have enough money to put a new lawn ornament in Wefald's yard and not enough to hire enough teachers to teach the students here on campus?

I like how university officials use all of my tuition money for leaf blowers to blow off sidewalks all day instead of cutting back my classes. Thanks.

This is just to inform everybody that once and for all, Puffy is a stupid nickname. There is no way of getting around it. It's stupid. Whether it's Puffy Combs, or Puffy what, just figure it out. It's stupid.

JJ Duncan, about that DMB review, Dave Matthews called and — wait, no, he didn't because Dave doesn't care what you think. And neither do I.

What the hell is the matter with the administration at this university? The Union can't afford to pay its power bills, we are supposed to be in the worst financial crunch in the last 20 years, yet we are building a worthless new Alumni Center. We are putting sod down, or astroturf or whatever, on Memorial Stadium. I think our priorities are severely misaligned here. Education should take top priority over anything at a university, for crying out loud.

Question for Thursday

Should K-State's election process be changed? How?

READERS WRITE

Education should be higher priority with state Legislature

Editor,

The irony almost was too much to bear. Last week the Collegian presented a series on the Kansas Legislature's proposed budget cuts for Fiscal Year 2002. Reading the stories was immeasurably frustrating. The cuts merely rest on the back of myriad other unfulfilled expectations and broken promises we have suffered over the years at the hands of our representatives in Topeka.

But I had to laugh at Friday's Collegian. At the bottom of the front page there was an article discussing the "Cats in the Capitol" event.

The program is designed to spread K-State pride.

"Our underlining message was to share the accomplishments of organizations and university groups," said Matt Wolters, Student Senate governmental relations chair. "It was not a lobby day. Our intent was to say, 'Hey, we're K-State, and we're proud to wear purple.'"

Apparently, we went to Topeka to wear purple and hand out ice cream, cheeses, meats, cookies and other food products from the university. The legislators apparently look forward to the event every year because they can sample what K-State produces.

So, despite the deep budget cuts and disappointing appropriations, K-State gave its legislators snack time and a story. If students went to Topeka to find government, it is apparent they left without it.

Why? Why should we appreciate what the state of Kansas has done for K-State?

Incumbent Gov. Bill Graves says he is an advocate of education in Kansas. He is all talk. His administration succeeded in passing an enormous transportation bill. That was the priority. Now, the governor can return to the trucking business when he leaves office.

There also were several annual bills that returned money to taxpayers annually in light of a budget surplus. Those bills had zero effect on stimulating the state economy. Instead, our surplus dwindled, and the following year the state operated in the red. Then came the cuts.

Since emptying money from state coffers, the governor has helped primary and secondary schools maintain the status quo. Now, Kansas public schools prepare students for college in other states, because the government has not fulfilled its responsibilities in higher education here.

The only transportation Kansas is doing is to see on this campus. Most of these changes are fairly simple, but they would vastly improve the quality of life for many K-State students.

* Better classroom labels. Yes, I know this seems petty, but think about it. In a few buildings (most notably Eisenhower and Cardwell Halls) all of the small classrooms almost are identical. Every year, dozens of students become terribly traumatized when they mistake one room for another. Memorizing room numbers is too much hassle for most of us, but we pay for our laziness with embarrassment.

Several months ago, I noticed a yellow ducky made of construction paper taped to the door of Eisenhower 225. This struck me as utterly brilliant. Why shouldn't we tape colored animals to every classroom door?

That way, students would have a quick and easy method of identification for their classrooms. This dramatically would increase morale among the student body. It also would make me look less like a total idiot.

MICAH HAWKINSON

* Line schedule improvements. The current line schedules seriously are flawed. The only information they provide about the difficulty of classes is the department and course level. We should implement a new system wherein students review each course's difficulty level on a scale of one to ten. This would save us the work of dropping overly difficult classes (the ones that require work) and adding easier ones during the beginning of the semester.

We also could replace each traditional room number in the schedule with a little picture of whatever colored animal is on the door of the classroom.

* The doors of All Faiths' Chapel. These doors obviously are an example of inefficient bureaucracy. You see, they're installed backwards. The traditional "pull" handle is on the "push" side of the door and vice versa.

My friends tell me the doors were meant to be like that, but that's just what the establishment wants us to think. Let's admit we made a mistake and get the doors

Tunes of hate

Rapper Eminem's lyrics lack substance, desensitize listeners to hate acts

I'm not so worried about Eminem anymore. After I heard Eminem was up for four Grammy nominations, I started collecting my information so I, too, could join the chorus denouncing Eminem.

It isn't surprising that the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences awarded Eminem with three Grammys and gave him a primetime singing duet with 1970s rock icon Elton John (get the hetero-supremacist to sing with the homosexual, and the world will believe the NARAS truly is progressive).

How could the NARAS not recognize Eminem for his achievement? "The Marshall Mathers LP" was the second-best selling (or should I say marketed?) album of 2000. It's no secret Grammys are awarded not by the quality of the work but by the quantity of the record sales. If there were truth in advertising, the NARAS would be renamed National Academy of Recording Sales.

As art, Eminem's work is not. Musically, it's a bland form of pop-rap. Lyrically, singing about hurting others for no other reason than he finds homosexuals and women annoying is neither enlightening nor intellectual.

Art is supposed to expand the vision of human kind. Great art that has offended, shocked or caused outrage did so because it went against social conventions either by thinking outside the box (Beethoven's 9th Symphony, Matisse's "The Green Stripe," jazz) or was an in-your-face criticism of social ills (Bosch's visions of Hell, Goya's or Dix's pictures depicting the horrors of war, Manet's candid paintings of nudes, The Sex Pistols). Here, the artist attempts to make the world a better place.

Eminem is the antithesis of this. Unlike gangsta rap, which is a cry from the inner cities, "This is the sh—hole that is my world," Eminem is just the voice of angry white trash. It is devoid of the requisite examination of the violent impulses expressed in the lyrics through which a cultural change can occur.

Not to say that white trash doesn't deserve a voice. It's just that a measure of civilization is how far it has come shedding its small-minded bigotries, not how it revels in them.

Shock and rage for the sake of shock and rage has been played out long ago. As art motif, it's become vacant and boring.

Eminem says it's all just a joke, but I don't get it. If anything truly is offensive in a universally objective sense, it is empty violence and the ignorant hatred from which it stems.

But after watching PSB's Frontline "Merchants of Cool," I'm no longer concerned.

The program was an exposé on the multimillion-dollar industry that tries to discern what's cool with youth to assist the multibillion-dollar industry that sells youth the crap they buy.

And what's cool today is rage rock. Existing solely in the subculture for many years, rage rock finally has been discovered by the five sole megamedia marketers (AOL, Time Warner, Viacom, Disney, News Corporation and Vivendi Universal).

In "Merchants of Cool," the marketing history of rage group Limp Bizkit and its cozy relationship with MTV (which is itself one big marketing tool to sell crap to kids) was documented. Limp Bizkit isn't Rage Against the Machine. It's a product of the machine, by the machine and for the machine. Limp Bizkit, as it turns out, is just N'Sync with a bad attitude.

And then it became obvious. Eminem is just the new and improved, repackaged and retitled 21st-century version of Vanilla Ice.

The unfortunate thing about selling cool is that once it becomes mainstream, it instantly becomes uncool. Eminem sold 8 million compact discs. Eminem sang at the Grammys. Eminem is mainstream and thus uncool. Besides, for a homophobic, he dresses kind of gay.

Thus, the megamedia machine is onto the next big group: Insane Clown Posse. Looking like the illegitimate children of KISS Army, ICP has its rage and hate cranked just a notch higher and an MTV video to sell itself and CK for Children.

But it really doesn't matter. Most of us eventually grow up and figure out what's truly important — love of family and friends and being valuable to society. Jesus and the Beatles had it figured out long ago; thus, their appeal still today.

If something truly has value, it must possess substance in and of itself, regardless of whether it's in fashion.

But in the meantime, bring on the hate music. Why stop with songs about beating up homosexuals and women? Tomorrow, this type of rage will be old school. The sooner truly cutting-edge rage-hate groups like Screwdriver and Bahowa get signed to major labels, the sooner we can watch MTV videos about killing black people and Jews and exalting the accomplishments of Adolf Hitler.

Only then, when this kind of hatred becomes fashionable and thus uncool, the only cool thing left to do will be to go church and sing "We've Got a Friend in Jesus."

So, kids, beat the rush. Run down to your neighborhood tattoo parlor and be the first on your block to have "Godarchy" inscribed across your foreheads.

You can lead the trend or follow it; the choice is yours.

Yellow duckies, urinals top voter concerns

The Student Governing Association elections are kind of like a container of exquisitely aged Rice-A-Roni in the back of the refrigerator.

You forget its existence until, one fateful morning, it comes slithering into your room under its own power. Then you scream and run in circles for five minutes before you realize your roommates are playing a cruel prank on you. Subsequently, you spend the morning plotting revenge.

The point is, it's easy to forget SGA elections are taking place. After all, there are so many other things to worry about: dating (at least theoretically), eating, studying (again, theoretically) and watching taped episodes of "Survivor" until you are weary of life (it shouldn't take long to do this).

No matter how busy you are, it's not good to forget about voting this week. Even though it might sometimes seem like a glorified popularity contest, the elections have a very real effect on your life. The people you vote into office will be deciding how to spend your tuition money and how to make K-State a better place.

Regardless of who is elected into office, there are some changes I desperately want to see on this campus. Most of these changes are fairly simple, but they would vastly improve the quality of life for many K-State students.

* Better classroom labels. Yes, I know this seems petty, but think about it. In a few buildings (most notably Eisenhower and Cardwell Halls) all of the small classrooms almost are identical. turned around the right way. OK?

* The urinals in Hale Library's restrooms. I don't know who designed them, but I would guess it was a vindictive, angst-ridden hobbit. I am not a tall person, but these bathroom fixtures give me some serious trouble. I only shudder to think what would happen if 6-foot-9-inch forward Donnie Wallace attempted to use one of them.

There are many other issues that need to be addressed, but I'm sure you get the idea. The catch is, they won't be addressed unless we elect a president who will address them. It's funny how that works out, isn't it?

This is why it's so important that we be involved in the SGA election. K-State's future depends on us, so we ought to do a little research on the candidates, muster up some gumption and vote.

Incidentally, if you ever get the urge to sample fetid Rice-A-Roni, stifle it. Trust me, I know this.

intended purpose.

And we must begin calling in our alumni. Together we make a formidable voting block. Perhaps the KSU Alumni Association needs to request some funding from the foundation for the creation of a higher-education lobby group. A group that is independent from the university — as the Alumni Association is — to piece together a reliable voting network in our state.

Graves might be an incumbent, but the legislators are not. We must begin to take control of our political resources, and we must begin to hold the Legislature accountable instead of giving it gifts and pats on the back.

Otherwise, students will become Kansas' main export.

Napster file-blocking plan to be in place by Monday

By MATTHEW FORDAHL
The Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Chart-topping music still could be freely traded by Napster users Monday despite the company's courtroom promise to phase in song-screening technology over the weekend.

Attempts by The Associated Press to download all of Billboard's top 10 songs Monday were successful.

A query for music by the band Metallica also brought some easy downloads, although one of that band's songs, "Unforgiven," did appear to be blocked.

A Napster spokeswoman would not comment on apparent delays in implementing its filtering plan. On its Web site, Napster said the process of screening out file names, song titles and artists wouldn't be easy.

"It has involved a significant investment of time and resources," a statement said. "However, we believe it is superior to shutting the service down and disbanding the community during the transition period to the new membership-based service."

During a federal court hearing Friday on the music industry's bid to shut down the service, Napster attorney David Boies said the service would deploy the screening system over the weekend. He did not provide a specific time.

With the service facing the expected imminent change, usage soared during the weekend. More than 11,100 people shared a total of 2.2 million files Sunday evening through just one of dozens of servers operated by Napster.

"I've downloaded a bunch of things before it ends," said Chavelle Wiseman, a 16-year-old user from Palo Alto, Calif. "It's everything I've wanted to download for a while."

The software to be installed on Napster's servers will block access to 1 million music file names and 5,600 song titles supplied by the recording industry, Boies said.

Because it will filter out variations on each song's title and artist's name, the actual number of tunes screened out will be smaller, but officials refused to say how many distinct songs will be blocked.

Napster's plan is a pre-emptive move against an injunction sought by the major record labels, which argue copyright holders and artists are not compensated for music traded on the service. Napster has argued its computers do not store actual song files but rather direct people to other users' hard drives where the music can be downloaded.

In July, U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel granted the industry's request for a preliminary injunction and ordered Napster shut down for facilitating infringement.

But last month, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals stayed the order pending its decision in the case.

By Friday, all parties were back in court to discuss the case when Napster changed its tune and announced plans to start blocking songs.

Amy Weiss, a spokeswoman for the Recording Industry Association of America, said Sunday the group would have no immediate comment on Napster's implementation of file blocking or lack thereof.

Honor Hill, a member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship, speaks internationally on the topic of Mary Baker Eddy and Eddy's primary work "Science and the Key to the Scriptures." Hill spoke and answered questions about Eddy Monday night in the Union Flint Hills Room.

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

Mary Baker Eddy changed people's mindsets during the 19th century and took religion on to a different course.

Honor Hill presented a lecture Monday evening, kicking off Women's History Month, celebrating the life of Eddy and her place in history.

Eddy founded the religion Christian Science and the newspaper Christian Science Monitor. She also wrote the book "Science and Health With the Key to the Scriptures."

Hill said Eddy shared a common thread with other women activists of the time.

"She, too, wanted people to think, but she wanted to set a goal for divine rights," Hill said. "Eddy wanted rights for people on a worldwide level."

The lecture was sponsored by the KSU Christian Science Organization and K-State's Women's Studies Department. Hill will give a second lecture at 7 tonight at Varney's Book Store in Aggieville.

Eddy focused on health as one of the divine rights.

"She said that as children of God, we had rights which stemmed from that relationship," Hill said.

Eddy was raised in a pious atmosphere and tested theological doctrines.

"Even as a young child, she challenged religious ideas," Hill said.

Eddy spent the first half of her life physically ill.

"She thought she would spend the rest of her life teaching piano,"

Hill said.

Hill said Eddy believed in a higher and more practical Christianity.

Eddy became interested in faith-healing after an accident that severely injured her spine.

"She read a healing passage from the Bible and was automatically healed," Hill said. "She said that if it could happen to her, it could happen to others."

Hill said Eddy's health caused her to search for all therapeutic options.

"After all her unsuccessful attempts, she found the influence of the mind brought about cures," Hill said.

Hill said that after Eddy cured a patient with pneumonia, she began to get a reputation for healing, which led to an interest in writing and journalism.

Hill said she feels it is important to speak about women in history, such as Eddy.

"We are now standing on these women's shoulders," she said.

Lori Wilson, sophomore in public relations, attended Hill's lecture for her Women's Studies class.

"I found it to be incredibly informative and surprisingly interesting," she said.

Emily Cherry, junior in mass communications, said she had lots of reservations before the lecture.

"I know that Eddy stands for religious ideas that I disagree with," Cherry said, "but I still think that the material can apply to anyone. It was inspirational besides my religious oppositions."

Cats look to claw way through Baylor game to keep in tournament running

BY DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collegian

March Madness starts tonight for the women's basketball team.

The Cats travel to Kansas City, Mo.'s Municipal Auditorium for an 8:20 p.m. tipoff against Baylor in the first round of the 2001 Big 12 Tournament.

The matchup will mark the second time in seven days that the Lady Bears (20-7, 9-7) and the Wildcats (12-15, 2-14) have locked horns on the hardwood. On Feb. 28, No. 24 Baylor used a 41-point second-half effort to down K-State 57-74.

After leading 33-30 at the half, the Lady Bears' physicalness on the boards and consistency throughout the game led to the come-from-behind win.

"Their athleticism over the course of 40 minutes really became a factor," head coach Deb Patterson said. "You've got to be even more fundamental down the stretch because they are so quick and inherently faster, quicker and taller than you are."

Leading the Baylor comeback that night was All-American junior, Danielle Crookm. The All-Big 12 first team selection scored 29 points, 17 of which came in the second frame. The Bears' forward also collected six steals and eight rebounds on her way to being named the Big 12's player of the week.

Behind the efforts of Crookm and senior post Monica Arnold, Baylor leads the conference in team rebounding, averaging 47 per contest. Patterson likened the talented Lady Bear's glass-cleaning duo to another player who made a name for himself on the boards.

"Crookm and Arnold have that Dennis Rodman mentality towards rebounding," she said. "They just find ways to go get the basketball."

Arnold posted a double-double in the first matchup, scoring 14 points and grabbing 13 rebounds. The senior also blocked a career-high six shots in the paint. Baylor's one-two post punch of

Arnold and Crookm

combined to account for more than 58 percent of the Lady Bears' offense against the Cats, something

Patterson said must be neutralized in order to advance past tonight's first round.

"Rebounding is absolutely critical," she said. "It was something we talked about a great deal and emphasized going into the game, but to play against their quickness and size and respond to their system and exceptional nose for the ball is something we have a much greater appreciation for now that we've had to do it."

Balancing the rebounding element of the rematch will fall squarely on the shoulders of freshman of the year Nicole Ohlde in the post. Ohlde, who ranks fifth in the conference with 8.1 rebounds per game, managed only six against the Lady Bears. Overall, K-State was outrebounded 44-26, including just three offensive boards to Baylor's 24.

"It's going to be tough," Ohlde said. "Rebounding will be a really big thing. They got so many offensive boards, and we only had three. That's just a really big key for us."

Joining Crookm on the All-

Conference first team is Sheila

Lambert, the Big 12's newcomer of the year. In her first season with the Lady Bears, Lambert has demonstrated a nose for scoring.

The junior guard leads the conference, trailing just four others in the nation, pouring in 22.9 points a game. She also ranks third in the conference in assists (6.19), and fourth in steals (3.04).

How they stack up

K-State (12-15, 2-14) and No. 24 Baylor (20-7, 9-7) meet for the second time in seven days tonight at Municipal Auditorium in Kansas City, Mo., for the first round of the Big 12 Tournament. Here's how the teams compare statistically:

BLOCKS PER GAME	3.4	1.5

Getting noticed

Both teams take the floor with players who received post-season honors both nationally and in the Big 12.

Baylor's Sheila Lambert was named the conference's newcomer of the year, and leads the Big 12 in scoring average with 22.9 points per game. Lambert joins teammate Danielle Crookm as first team All-Big 12 selections. Both players also were honored by the Women's Basketball Service as All-Americans.

K-State's freshman forward Nicole Ohlde was named the Big 12's freshman of the year after leading the Cats in scoring and rebounding. Ohlde also is part of the Women's Basketball Service's All-Freshman team.

History on the Cats' side

The Lady Bears have lost in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament twice against lower-seeded opponents, including an overtime 71-66 loss to K-State in the 1998 tournament. Like this season, Baylor was seeded sixth in that tournament. The Lady Bears haven't won in the tournament since beating the Oklahoma State Cowgirls on March 4, 1997. The Cats have won three of the last five games against Baylor.

Cats split doubleheader with ISU

By DAN SMITH

Kansas State Collegian

Despite splitting a weather-shortened doubleheader with the Iowa State Cyclones Monday afternoon at Frank Myers Field, the K-State baseball team wasn't as sharp as it could have been.

"I was very disappointed with our offensive approach in the second ballgame," head coach Mike Clark said. "For as experienced as we are, I didn't see anything that showed that we made any adjustments, and a lot of us looked lost out there. After they got six runs on the board I thought our team quit."

K-State (6-7, 1-4) won the first game of the twin bill 5-4 against the Cyclones (5-8, 1-1) earlier in the afternoon when first baseman Mark English's two-out base hit in the bottom of the ninth dropped into left centerfield, plating shortstop Osmar Castillo. English's at-bat was set up by a J.D.

Loudabarger intentional walk to load the bases. The senior entered the game with a .174 average from the plate, but came through when he had to, Clark said.

"You look at the statistics, and if he's swinging the bat like he was last year, they would never do that, but he made them pay by making the most of the at-bat."

K-State had a hard time making ISU's second-game starter Lincoln Mincks pay though, collecting just five hits and no runs against the Cyclone pitcher.

Rather, it was K-State's Luke Robertson who had a tough time finding rhythm in 4 2/3 innings of work. The Cyclones pinned six runs and 10 hits on the Wildcat pitcher to drop his record to 2-3 on the year.

"He didn't hit his spots," Clark said. "He was throwing the ball over the middle of the plate too much. The umpire had a huge zone so he could have gone away a little bit more. He can't leave the ball out over the middle of the plate, and that's what he did."

Clark was impressed with his bullpen though. Sophomore Spencer Black came in to relieve Robertson and threw 3 1/3 shutout innings, striking out a career-high five Cyclones while surrendering no hits.

"I was just trying to give the team the best chance to win by competing in the strike zone," Black said. "If they hit the ball, they hit the ball. If not, I had a good day."

K-State hits the road for a three-game series in Lincoln, Neb. against the Nebraska Cornhuskers starting at 2 p.m. Friday.

3 Wildcats earn spots on Big 12 specialty teams

Juniors Larry Reid, Travis Reynolds and Phineas Atchison all earned spots on conference specialty teams, the league office announced Monday.

Reid was named to the All-Newcomer team, and Atchison and Reynolds were voted to the All-Bench team. The selections were made by a panel of sportswriters who regularly cover Big 12 basketball.

Reid becomes the fourth Cat to be selected to the All-Newcomer team, following the lead of Cortez Groves and Tony Kitt in 1999 and Duane Davis in 1998. Reynolds and Atchison are K-State's first-ever selections to the All-Bench team.

No Cats were voted to any of last year's squads.

MATT STAMEY/Collegian

Luke Robertson pitches to an Iowa State batter during K-State's 6-0 loss in the second game of a double header Monday afternoon. After trailing 4-2 in the top of the fifth, K-State rallied to win the first game 5-4.

Columnist's NFL 'mock draft' predicts several K-Staters as sure picks

To be honest, I think "mock drafts" are worthless.

All you get is bunch of sports pundits hopped up on testosterone and Michelob making predictions on who the Atlanta Falcons will take in the fifth round in 2006.

Of course, there are a few exceptions, like ESPN's Mel Kiper, the Nostradamus of draft-day goings-on, who can actually spot a potential game-breaker without a six-pack and a copy of "The Sporting News."

You'll never find me preparing a mock draft in my mock war room drinking a mock import and referring to my mock girlfriend who just happens to be a mock super model.

It's a waste of my time to make extensive predictions. Actually, I'm just afraid of being wrong.

However, I have put my ear to the ground and dug up the goods on the draftability of K-State's draft-day offerings, and this year could be a good year for the fans of everything purple.

Last year K-State had one of its most successful showings in the draft. For only the second time in school history, K-State had three Wildcats selected in the first 100 picks. Five players were selected overall. This year could be just as exciting.

K-State's top offering this year is wide-receiver extraordinaire Quincy Morgan. In early estimates, Morgan was listed one of the top-10 wide receivers in the draft, but lately his stock has shot up more often than Daryl Strawberry at a Puff Daddy party. Marvelous Mel Kiper lists Morgan as a possible top-25 pick, and recent rumors swirling around the World Wide Web (where everything said is honest and true) put Jonathan Beasley's favorite target even higher.

Several pros have suggested Morgan might be the most productive receiver to come out of the draft. No, he's not the highest-rated guy available, but he's got blazing speed and great size. He rarely gets caught up at the line of scrimmage, and he isn't afraid to go across the middle. The only real concern is that he drops a few balls here and there.

Even with the dropped balls, Morgan will be off the board before the 20th pick.

Another Wildcat player with a recent rise is safety Jarrod Cooper. He's consistently listed as one of the top-five safeties in the draft, and was rumored to have wowed many scouts in the draft. He's fast, strong and is a great tackler.

Cooper's got a heart the size of an ox and a smile to match. He's the first player to the ball and the first player to pick an opponent up off the ground. Cooper's only knock is his trouble in coverage.

David Allen once again is battling critics over his size. At 5'9" with shoes on, Allen doesn't have the bulk most teams want in a running back. But what he lacks in size, he makes up for with speed. He's got the legs of a cheetah, and he can turn on a dime. He executes more moves than a U-Haul. He's one of the best punt return prospects to enter the draft in years, and that may be his saving grace.

He played slot receiver in the Senior Bowl and could do the same in the NFL. He would work well as a third-down back and in special situations. He's one of the top 10 to 15 running backs in the draft and could go in the third round.

On the defensive side of the ball, Mario Fatafehi is turning a few heads. He consistently is rated as one of the draft's top-10 defensive tackles and could go as high as the second round, although conventional wisdom says he'll be found somewhere in the third round.

Super Mario is great against the running game, but he isn't the best pass-rusher in the draft. His size is impressive, and he's got good speed for his position.

Jamie Rheem's golden leg could earn him a late-round look. He's clearly one of the top-two kickers in the draft (listed just above Martin Gramatica's brother Bill). It's always tough to predict where kickers will be taken, but Rheem will find himself in the late rounds for sure.

K-State has six other players in the draft who could find their ways onto an NFL roster. Tight end Shad Meier is one of the top-10 at his position and could get picked up late in the draft. Randall Cummins, center, has been listed as a potential late-rounder. He lacks the size of most centers, but is well-liked because he is a hard worker and is very smart.

Monty Beisel, Cliff Holloman, Dyshod Carter and Jerametrius Butler have received mixed reviews, but all have been listed as potential draft-day picks. They also are good bets as free agents if they don't get picked up during the draft.

JACKSON

Nathan Jackson plays the part of Private James Wilkie in "A Soldier's Play," opening this week. Jackson has been acting since his sophomore year of high school, when he played the part of Mr. Mushnik in "Little Shop of Horrors." Since coming to K-State in 1999, Jackson has been involved in several productions.

Being able to become someone else and control the audience's emotions throughout the play is what Jackson said he enjoys about acting. Jackson said he hopes when audiences leave a performance he is a part of, that has a message, they feel inspired to change things.

Jackson said he encourages people to support local arts whenever possible. Even with all the competition in a career in performance, Jackson said it is something he would like to pursue.

"I understand that it's a hard business to get in, but if I want in if I can crack it an any angle, acting, writing, directing or possibly even teaching," he said.

ACTORS GO TO LUNCH

Purple Masque offers intimate 1-act plays

By JJ DUNCAN
Kansas State Collegian

Out to Lunch

Lunchbag Theater takes place in the Purple Masque Theatre. The next productions will be "Tough Choices for the New Century" at 11:30 a.m. March 13 and "A Life in the Theater" at 11:30 a.m. March 15.

The lights are on, the cast is rehearsed, and the audience is attentive—even if it does occasionally crinkle a sandwich wrapper and stuff it in a paper bag.

Nearly every Thursday, an audience takes its seats over the lunch hour in the Purple Masque Theatre for a free one-act play presented by Lunchbag Theater.

Audiences are welcome to bring their lunches into the theatre and eat during the performances, said Lew Shelton, associate professor in the Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance.

"It's relaxed, so it's more like an everyday experience than a big production," he said.

Students direct, act in and do the lighting for the plays. Since the productions are small, experimental material is more welcome, Amanda Moon, senior in theater, said.

"Directors have the opportunity to do something they wouldn't normally get a chance to use in a university setting," she said.

Moon said she is directing a play that will show next week called "A Life in the Theater," about a man who realizes he has ignored important aspects of his life to pursue his love of theater.

Moon is a student in a practice in directing class, and the play she is directing is part of her grade.

Lunchbag Theatre is the result of efforts from three classes. Practice in Directing and Practice in Acting both are taught by Shelton, and Play Stage Lighting is taught by John Uthoff, associate professor of theater.

Shelton said he began Lunchbag Theatre in 1977 to give students a chance to apply what they learn.

"I was teaching a class where I didn't feel like the students were working very hard on their scenes," he said. "I thought they would work harder if they had a goal of performing in front of an audience."

After so many years put into the plays, Shelton said it always is gratifying to see them come together. Shelton said the Purple Masque is a good venue for students to learn in because of its small size that makes it an intimate setting.

"In the Purple Masque, the students can concentrate on learning their craft and honing their skills instead of worrying about projecting energy in a big theater," he said.

For the one-act plays, the Purple Masque is very appropriate, Ben Hensley, senior in theater, said. Hensley is a student in Shelton's Practice in Acting class, and he said the venue is appropriate for the class.

"This space hones your subtlety as an actor," he said. "It's very intimate with the audience so close, and working in that kind of space is crucial to an actor's training."

Since the directors are free to choose more obscure plays, the experience promises to be interesting for audiences, Rich Galvan, graduate student in theater, said.

Galvan said he is directing a play that will run on March 29 titled "How it Hangs."

Aside from just being an outlet for students to practice their skills, Galvan said Lunchbag Theatre is a great venue for being able to see one-act plays because they often aren't seen in the area.

Audiences get to see material that wouldn't normally receive exposure, Galvan said.

"This gives us the opportunity to explore scripts that don't get used very often," he said.

From a director's standpoint, Galvan said he is able to become better acquainted with the strengths and limits of the actors because they are his peers and he has class with them.

This week there is no play scheduled because "A Soldier's Play" will show this weekend in the Purple Masque, but they will resume next week March 13 and March 15.

Hensley said he encourages people to see at least one of the plays that show for Lunchbag Theatre because it is a good way to experience live theater.

"It's fun because the experience of seeing someone in pain right in front of your eyes is more visceral than watching that emotion acted out on a screen," he said. "It seems more personal knowing you are breathing the same air as those actors."

Shelton said he is pleased with the effectiveness of the experience, and it gives him a way to judge the abilities of his students.

It is a rare experience to see theater completely controlled on the student level, he said.

"Since they put on these productions it's not like papers or tests that you usually take grades on," he said. "But there is a definite process. They have to learn dramatic values and create those on stage.

"It's the kind of teaching everyone would ideally like to do because they learn by creating."

Tuesday night's game also marks the beginning of the end for four Wildcat seniors, including the Big 12's all-time three-point shooter, Kim Woodlee. As a result, the Cats' seniors will be playing with a fire ignited by the prospect of playing in their last game.

"It definitely will give you energy in times when you think you don't have any," Woodlee said. "If there's one thing I don't want to do once I've finished my career, it's look back and say, 'I wish I would have given a little more.' At this point, I want to know that when I walk off the court there wasn't one more thing that I could have done to help us win."

K-State welcomes the challenge of shutting down the Lady Bears, Woodlee said. Facing her final tournament with the Cats, the senior said her team isn't coming into the game fearing anything Baylor brings to the table.

"Everybody in the league wants it bad," she said. "It takes a lot of hard work, you have to put all of your improving over the course of the year together, and you have to have a little bit of luck to stay consistent all the way through the whole tournament."

"There are no more second chances because you have to win to survive. We're looking real forward to playing Baylor. We're not scared or intimidated by them. We know we can play with them, we know what it takes to beat them, so we'll have a lot of energy coming into the game."

CAMPAIGNS

the money," he said.

Lenkner said spending can't get too out of hand because regulations limit the amount of personal money candidates can spend. Personal money is a combination of their own money and money from non-student sources.

Student body presidential candidates are limited to spending $800 of personal money. Students can contribute up to $20 each to a campaign.

The big-ticket item on the candidates' expenditure reports was T-shirts. Banners were another significant cost. Other expenses for the candidates included items like copies, buttons, string and chalk. Only three candidates in the other student government races spent more than the former spending cap of $50.

The largest spender was Karl Krier, a candidate for Arts and Science Senate. She spent $195, of which $171 was for T-shirts.

Krier was being investigated for a possible campaign violation Monday night. All her contributors were family members.

For Student Senate candidates, only $50 can be from personal money. Further funding must come from students, who can make donations of up to $5 each.

Krier and 35 other students can appear before a hearing board at 7 tonight at the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union to appeal possible violations.

Petrik said he does not know what — if any — sanctions would be levied against Krier.

Krier said she had been confused about the new regulations and would make an appeal to the hearing board.

Thirty candidates have cases before the hearing board due to turning in late expense reports. Petrik said these students likely would be fined. Five candidates did not turn in expense reports and, therefore, could be disqualified.

Petrik said that regardless, he is pleased with the election thus far.

"It has been a fairly violation-free election," Petrik said. "There have been minor details people have forgotten."

OSU tragedy affects possible bid offer

By DOUG TUCKER
The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The horror of the Oklahoma State plane crash will stalk the NCAA selection committee this week.

Big 12 commissioner Kevin Weiberg, a first-year member of the panel, lost a nephew in the Jan. 29 tragedy that claimed 10 members of Oklahoma State's traveling party, including two players.

Bill Hancock, NCAA tournament director, lost a son.

Everyone will be as considerate as they possibly can be to the feelings of the two men, of course. But at some point in the room where the committee is cloistered, the Cowboys will be considered for a precious at-large bid to the NCAA tournament.

That's when things could get tricky.

Will the committee give extra weight to Oklahoma State out of sentiment? Should it?

There are only 34 at-large bids to pass around. It could be a close call. There is no precedent for this in tournament history, and the NCAA always has maintained that sentiment never was a factor in its tournament decisions.

"We haven't talked about it, and I don't know how to answer that," committee chairman Mike Tranchese said.

With a 19-8 overall record going into the Big 12 tournament starting Thursday, the Cowboys probably are a bubble team — no cinch for a bid unless they win the Big 12's automatic entry.

"They're human beings," Oklahoma coach Kelvin Sampson said. "It can't help but be a factor. Those are husbands and fathers and human beings in that room, and I do think it will be a factor."

alcohol to a minor Feb. 19 at the Aggie Lounge is scheduled for Thursday. He also is scheduled to go on trial March 27 on charges of leaving the scene of an accident, driving under the influence, refusing to take a breath test and unsafe turning.

Bahari said it wasn't definite that laws were broken, but she said he did violate Collegian policy. The K-State Police were notified and a report was filed.

A Collegian voter's guide questionnaire, which Wooten and other SGA candidates completed, stated that all candidates were required to refrain from visiting the newsroom until Thursday.

Candidates who entered the newsroom for election-related or class-related reasons to speak with reporters were excluded from the policy.

Bahari said Wooten's actions were inappropriate. She said although he did not alter either story's content, he had the access to do so.

The incident has led the Collegian to review its newsroom policies, she said.

"It's a violation of our security and journalistic integrity," Bahari said.

Chengappa said.

The quality of education will diminish if this is a prolonged scaledown, Chengappa said.

The ability of the college to attract quality faculty and maintain faculty retention will have an effect from the budget cuts, Chengappa said.

Chengappa said this would not have an effect on students staying on track with their graduation dates and requirements.

An additional area that would be affected is the purchase of quality equipment and being able to afford quality research, Chengappa said.

Sarah Burkindine, third-year student in veterinary medicine, said she thinks there would be some minor effects on the school.

"I can see where it might hurt students once they are in the school and when they are comparing themselves to students in other colleges," Burkindine said. "Students might have a concern when looking at the quality of their education compared to other schools."

The areas Burkindine said she thinks might see some effects from the budget cuts are the instructional-type labs, speakers who come into the vet school and having people come from other veterinary schools to help educate or give speeches.

Richardson said the college always is in need of a budget increase for salaries, equipment and personnel.

"Yes, we have projects, but because of the budget cuts, we will have to be strategic. We will have to save," Richardson said.

PREVENTION

responded to more than 900 calls to the hotline and refers some to local authorities.

Safety also is a concern for Elisabeth Schafer, a senior in elementary education, who said these incidents of school violence can make her wonder about her ability to handle a situation of crisis.

"It's not something that I think about on a daily basis," she said. "I led a sheltered life. I guess, and when I see something like that it makes me think that parents need to be more involved with their students."

Fred Bradley, professor of education, teaches a class for secondary education students on interpersonal communication in schools. He said one key to the problem is to give students a sense of belonging.

"I think the idea is to sensitize teachers to the kids or students who have trouble fitting in — and trying to address the needs that they have," Bradley said. "The one thing that is common in these shootings is that the students had some sense of alienation."

Schafer said in her educational training at K-State, school violence has been discussed, but she said she wishes she had taken a class dedicated to it. Still, it is not something she will let deter her from going into the profession.

"I am in teaching to make a difference in the lives of kids, and you cannot live life scared," she said. "If that type of situation comes into play, that is a hazard I will have to deal with."

Toelkes said school shootings can make people forget how safe schools are.

"We see these types of shootings, and they are horrific," Toelkes said. "But in reality, when you check it out, most schools are pretty safe, and we want to keep it that way. The hotline is a way that we can do that."

Polls close today for SGA election voting

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
Kansas State Collegian

The Student Governing Association election polls will close at 5 p.m. today. After 5 p.m., voting online no longer will be accessible through KATS. If students have trouble voting before the election's conclusion, they are encouraged to go to the Office of Student Activities and Services from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Computers are set up and staff are on hand to help students through the process. Compared to last year's election, this year's online voting has been a success, Jake Worcester, student body president, said. "I've heard of no problems. It's going extremely well," Worcester said. "We seem to have worked out a lot of the kinks from last year, and we also went with a different company this year." Students can expect the election results to be aired at about 8 tonight on cable channel 8. The program will feature special appearances by Worcester, Dana Pracht, student body vice president; Gayle Spencer, director of student affairs; Dustin Petrik, Student Senate elections chair; and Matt Jolly, program director for KSDB-FM 91.9. If there are no problems in tabulating the results, Petrik said students should know the election results by 8:15 p.m. The results for student body president and vice president should be interesting, considering there has been a runoff every year following the 1996 election, Worcester said. A candidate must receive a majority of the votes to rule out a runoff. If no candidate has a majority, there is a runoff between the top two candidates who received the most votes. Petrik said he thinks the likelihood for a runoff exists. "I would expect a runoff," Petrik said. "There are several good tickets this year, and they all have a chance in making it to the next step." If a runoff occurs, both pairs of candidates will make a brief appearance on the cable program. Worcester said he encourages everyone to vote. "Student government is the student's voice to faculty, students and state government," he said. "People need to be sure to research the candidates and the issues and vote for the people they want to represent them and their issues." Petrik said it's important that the students help elect those who will represent K-State before the Kansas Legislature and the Kansas Board of Regents.

Local businesses criticizing proposed keg bill

A bill that would require liquor stores to register beer kegs is drawing criticism from local merchants and customers.

"I think it is an invasion of privacy," Ed Rickel, owner of Rickel's Liquor, said. "It is not going to put an end, or even reduce, underage drinking."

The bill is designed to discourage adults from buying beer kegs for parties at which underage drinkers are present.

"It is not going to stop the underage drinking," Brian Shaw, manager of Dean Liquor, said. "All it is going to do is change what they drink. The people that are buying the kegs for the underage drinkers will just start buying cases of beer. It is that simple." The bill would require stores to give all containers with more than four gallons of beer an identification number and record who buys them. Law enforcement officials then could check a store's record if they busted a beer party and no one claimed the keg.

The proposal was drafted by Sen. Jim Barnett, R-Emporia, who said he hopes to use the bill as a tool to reduce high-risk underage drinking.

"I understand that there can never be a stop to underage drinking," Barnett said. "But hopefully this will have an impact on the process."

Barnett said the bill will reduce access to large quantities of beer.

Architecture braces for budget cuts

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
Kansas State Collegian

Dennis Law, dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, said staying positive has been a challenge in light of possible budget cuts.

"I'm losing hope everyday," he said, "yet I need to be optimistic for the sake of faculty and student morale."

The College of Architecture, Planning and Design is the smallest college on campus. If the budget cuts are approved by the Kansas Legislature, the college is looking at an estimated loss of about $43,000 out of its current budget and twice that amount permanently.

"It's my understanding that those figures are the most optimistic," he said. "They could end up being worse."

The cuts might be detrimental to the college.

"We know it'll be very difficult and quite damaging if the cuts that are projected actually materialize," Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture, said. "We're not at all sure how we'd accommodate the cuts that are likely to take place."

Commission joins in utility hike protest

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
Kansas State Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission, some members citing California's recent energy problems, unanimously agreed to chip in Tuesday night with a consortium of cities opposing utility rate increases.

Manhattan's donation, $17,500, will fund lawyers, witnesses and accountants collected by a Topeka-led consortium of cities to opposing proposed rate increases by utility company Western Resources.

The proposal set before the Kansas Corporation Commission suggests a 19- to 20-percent increase in utility rates for communities like Manhattan and Topeka — formerly served by KPI Gas Services. Western Resources cited new electrical equipment as one reason

Court order forces Napster to remove selected copyrighted songs

By RON HARRIS
The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A federal judge told the music industry to catalog the copyright songs it wants removed from Napster Inc. and said the highly popular file-swapping service then has 72 hours to block free sharing of that music.

The order, dated Monday and posted Tuesday, effectively gave the recording industry control over the immediate fate of the Internet-based clearinghouse that has turned music distribution on its head and cultivated a following of millions.

Napster is fighting to stay online and retain its popularity while promising to shift over to a subscription-based service. For that, it depends on the cooperation of the very music labels that sued the company to stop song swapping.

The order by U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel did not specify what would happen if Napster was unable to comply, except to say another hearing could take place. Napster officials had no immediate comment.

Patel, in issuing an injunction she reworked on the order of an appeals court, said the record labels must notify Napster of the title of the song, the name of the artist and the name of the Napster file containing the infringing material.

She said all parties should take reasonable measures to identify the copyright-infringing music.

Napster, which began a screening system this weekend in an effort to weed out such copyright music, then would have three business days to implement a system of blocking access to that file.

Patel acknowledged that it might be difficult to identify all variations of a copyrighted song, given that Napster users could use code words or shorthand to identify different pieces of music. "This difficulty, however, does not relieve Napster of its duty," she wrote.

Patel's ruling does not mean Redwood City-based Napster has to shut down or turn itself off, said Eric Sheiner, an analyst with Forrester Research.

"What it does is give the record labels a great deal of power over exactly what songs are going to show up on Napster, how long they're going to be there, and how usable Napster will be for the vast number of consumers that are on there now," Sheiner said.

"The record industry has the advantage now of being able to get these songs off Napster any time they choose," Sheiner said. "But if they do it now, consumers will flee to all these other alternative services where they won't be able to control them."

All parties are due to meet with a mediator Friday.

Hilary Rosen, president of the Recording Industry Association of America, said the labels would comply fully with the court's order.

"We intend to provide the notifications prescribed by the court expeditiously and look forward to the end of Napster's infringing activity," Rosen said.

A lawyer representing heavy metal band Metallica and rapper/producer Dr. Dre in their $10 million suits against Napster praised the ruling and said his clients have been eager to get their songs off Napster for a long time.

"If Napster complies with what this injunction says, it will be to our satisfaction," attorney Howard King said. "It's technologically doable. The question is, is Napster going to go to the necessary steps to do it?"

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled last month that an original injunction against Napster issued by Patel was overly broad because it placed the entire burden on Napster of ensuring that no copying, downloading, uploading, transmitting or distributing of works occurs.

Former lottery employee fined, receives probation

TOPEKA — The attorney general's office didn't press for a prison term for a former employee accused of stealing nearly $63,000 from the Kansas Lottery.

And a judge, in line with the state's recommendations, put Richard Lee Knowlton on probation for three years. Knowlton, 56, of Topeka, also must pay a $25,000 fine.

Knowlton won't avoid time behind bars completely. A condition of his probation is that he spend 55 days in the Shawnee County jail during those three years.

He also must serve 200 hours of community service under the sentence imposed Monday by Shawnee County District Judge Marla Luckert.

Knowlton already had repaid the state the money he stole. Assistant Attorney General Stephen Maxwell said the state's primary concern was becoming whole again.

"I think that we've penalized him," Maxwell said. "The judge followed the state's recommendations to the letter."

Cheney leaves hospital; tests show no damage

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Vice President Dick Cheney was released from the hospital Tuesday, a day after undergoing a surgical procedure to repair a damaged artery.

The vice president walked out of George Washington University Hospital, shook hands with his doctors and was driven away. "Good," he said, in response to a reporter's shouted question about how he felt.

Cheney was up about 7 a.m. and was antsy to leave, said senior aide Mary Matalin. Three sets of cardiac enzyme tests showed no damage to Cheney's heart muscle, and "multiple EKGs have been unchanged," she said.

Cheney will rest at home and likely will return to work later this week, said White House spokesman Ari Fleischer.

"No restrictions have been placed on his work," Fleischer said. He said President Bush had not spoken with Cheney about his work schedule, but the president expects him to follow his doctor's orders.

The procedure Cheney underwent Monday was prompted by a common complication of his prior heart procedure, not a progression of heart disease, Matalin said.

Cheney should be able to continue in his job unimpeded by his latest heart problems, doctors say, shrugging off any suggestion that he should curtail travel or his intense workload.

Southwestern Bell plans to offer long distance

TOPEKA — Southwestern Bell, already the dominant local telephone service provider in most of Kansas, plans to jump into the long-distance market today.

The company hopes to attract residential long-distance customers in Kansas and Oklahoma with a package that gives them a lower rate if they purchase local phone, Internet and satellite television services all from Bell.

The firm calls its package "Simple Solutions," and it features a long-distance rate of 8 cents a minute.

Bell's plans already led a big competitor in the long-distance market, AT&T, to announce that it will offer customers 30 free minutes of long-distance calls within the United States if they don't switch to Bell.

Six weeks ago, the Federal Communications Commission gave Bell permission to sell long-distance service to consumers in Kansas and Oklahoma. The FCC acted under a 1996 federal law designed to end the separation between local and long-distance service providers.

Head-count census data declared to be official

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Bush administration declared the actual "head count" from the 2000 census the official population numbers for congressional redistricting, despite estimates showing 3.3 million people, mostly minorities, were missed.

Commerce Secretary Don Evans agreed Tuesday with a Census Bureau recommendation that the initial, raw count provided the most nearly accurate snapshot of America. Democrats and civil rights groups had called for the use of a second, separate population tally statistically adjusted to protect against the undercount.

But supporters of adjustment had expected Evans' decision following the bureau's recommendation last week. It might quiet — but not end — a long political dispute between Democrats and Republicans over whether, and how, to count missed Americans.

Gunman talked about plans

By BEN FOX
The Associated Press

SANTE, Calif. — Friends say the scrawny freshman accused in the nation's latest high school bloodbath talked about his plans over the weekend, and they took him seriously enough to pat him down before school.

One adult even warned Charles Andrew "Andy" Williams not to commit "a Columbine" and tried to call the 15-year-old's father, but didn't follow through. But no one is known to have reported the threats that preceded the attack Monday that left two dead and 13 wounded.

Although Santana High was closed Tuesday, students, parents and others gathered outside to place flowers at a makeshift memorial site and share their grief. Some expressed anger that acquaintances of Williams heard him make threats in recent days but failed to warn authorities.

"I think they're to blame, too," said Helen Howard, a 10-year resident of the community who came to the high school with her husband. "I just can't understand why they didn't say anything."

During a morning counseling session at a church, an American Red Cross representative asked for a show of hands of people who had trouble sleeping the previous night. About a third of the 200 people who attended indicated they did.

"You may just feel like your heart is beating all the time and you can't calm down," Robert Bray, a Red Cross disaster mental health worker, told the audience. "I want to reassure you that people do get through this."

Teachers were told to report to school district headquarters.

As authorities dug into the case, the first question for many was: How could so many people see the warning signs and fail to act?

"That's going to be haunting me for a long time," said Chris Reynolds, who heard the threats and didn't report them.

Williams, kept in a juvenile facility Tuesday, will be charged as an adult with murder, assault with a deadly weapon and gun possession, District Attorney Paul Pfingst said. The adult prosecution is mandatory under a ballot measure approved last year, and the boy could face multiple life terms. Arraignment was set for Wednesday.

Pfingst said the gun belonged to Williams' father, Charles, a lab technician at the Naval Medical Center-San Diego, since July. Sheriff's and FBI officials Monday night searched the Williams' apartment and said they removed seven rifles, a computer, a plastic crate filled with papers and files, and about a half dozen bags filled with evidence.

Bryan Zuckor, 14, and 17-year-old Randy Gordon were killed; 11 other students and two adults — a student teacher and a campus security worker — were wounded. The adults and four students remained hospitalized in good or fair condition.

The shooting happened Monday morning in this mostly white, middle-class suburb of San Diego, a town that prides itself on its country atmosphere and low crime rate.

Youngsters were out and about as one "block" of students who start early in the day headed to their next classes and another group — Williams' "block" — arrived for their first classes.

The boy shot two people in a restroom, then walked into a quad and fired randomly, sheriff's Lt. Jerry Lewis said. He stopped to reload as many as four times, getting off 30 or more shots, Lewis said.

"It was total chaos. People were trying to take cover," said student John Schardt, 17, who was in a nearby classroom when the shooting started. He said the shooter had a smile on his face.

"Pop, pop, pop," and everyone started ducking," student Nika Ocen-Odoge said.

Barry Gibson, 18, said he ran at the sound, then returned with two others when they saw a friend fall to the ground. The friend rolled onto his side, spitting up blood.

"We were asking him, 'Are you OK?'" Gibson told the Los Angeles Times. Amid another burst of fire, Gibson ran. "I got hit in the leg," he said. "It went numb."

Authorities have said little about a motive for the rampage, but the suspect's life abounds in warning signs that have become as familiar as the TV images of frightened students being herded to safety from the presumed safe harbor of a suburban school.

Williams, whose parents are divorced, occasionally visited his mother, Linda Wells, in North Augusta, S.C. He and his father moved to California from Frederick County, Md., last year.

He's a skinny kid, a skateboarder "wannabe" friends said. There's talk of recent scrapes with booze and a girl, a breakup, and a beating by another teenager at the skateboard park where he hung out. His skateboard was stolen twice, one friend recalled.

"He was picked on all the time," student Jessica Moore said. "He was picked on because he was one of the scrawniest guys. People called him freak, dork, nerd, stuff like that."

While staying overnight Saturday with his friend Joshua Stevens, 15, Williams spoke specifically about shooting up the school, according to Stevens and Reynolds, who is dating Stevens' mother.

Both moved tentatively to head off trouble, but failed.

"My friend, A.J., patted him down this morning for guns, but he said he was joking," Stevens told The San Diego Union-Tribune. "I guess he had (the gun) by his crotch."

Alex Ripple, a 14-year-old who was present, said they searched Williams' body but not his backpack.

Reynolds said he warned Williams. "I even mentioned Columbine to him. I said I don't want a Columbine here at Santana. But he said, 'No, nothing will happen. I'm just joking,'" Reynolds told the AP.

Reynolds tried to call Williams' father Sunday, but gave up after getting no answer and then a busy signal, the Los Angeles Times reported.

There have been signs since the 1999 Columbine High massacre that left 15 dead in Colorado that teens and those around them have become more willing to report threatening behavior. At least four times around the country in recent months, students reported threats and possibly averted violent episodes at school.

Mortician assists families, friends dealing with losses

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

Dennis Irvin has served the community's funeral needs for more than 30 years.

Irvin is the director of the Irvin-Parkview Funeral Home, and he has worked in Manhattan for 20 years. He went to mortuary school in 1970 and has worked in Salina and Kansas City, Mo., before coming to Manhattan in 1981.

In mortuary school, Irvin said he not only learned funeral arrangement skills, ethics and mortuary law, but he also picked up a bit of science knowledge.

"A lot of what I do has to do with anatomy, chemistry and pathology," he said.

Irvin said Irvin-Parkview, like many funeral homes, offers a range of services for those putting their loved ones to rest.

"We sell caskets and arrange funeral services," he said. "We're here to take care of the remains the way the families want, whether it be with a burial, donation of the body to science or cremation."

While burial of the body usually is the most popular choice, Irvin said cremation of the body is becoming used frequently as well.

"The cremation rate in Kansas is about 15 to 18 percent," he said. "You usually can do it one of two ways. You can have the cremation where the body is cremated as soon as possible after death, or you can have the body embalmed and have a viewing and services, and then cremation."

Embalming, Irvin said, is done with almost every body the funeral home receives, and that the process of embalming is relatively simple.

"We replace the body fluids with a specifically prepared chemical that preserves the body," Irvin said.

Although embalming has its roots in ancient Egypt, when it was used during the process of mummification, it experienced a rebirth during the 1860s, said Eric Londeen, of Yorgensen-Meloan-Lundeen Funeral Home.

"It started primarily with the Civil War," Londeen said. "It was an easy way for soldiers to be transported home, rather than giving them a burial on the battleground." Irvin said another mainstream part of funerals is the fact that most funerals, especially in the Midwest, are presided over by religious figures.

"Ninety-nine percent of our services have to do with a religious figure of some sort," Irvin said. "We're used to the religious aspects of dying."

The most challenging part of his job, he said, is catering to everyone's needs and requests. "Every family grieves in their own way, and not every family asks for the same services," Irvin said. "It's very challenging trying to meet different needs."

He said Irvin-Parkview's main goal is to serve the community and make the death and grieving process a bit easier.

"We're here to serve families who have experienced the death of a loved one the best we can," Irvin said. "It's very satisfying to know we help people out."

Parents, media not to blame for shootings

A 15-year-old freshman opened fire Monday at his high school in California. He killed two students and wounded 13 other people. Some people blame the media for these tragedies. They say calling attention to the occurrence provokes others to act in similar ways. Yet, what would happen if the media ignored these incidents?

Others blame the parents of these children. Some blame the children who picked on those who ended up pulling the trigger.

Yet, the ultimate blame needs to fall on those who kill. There are preventative measures that can be taken. With cases like this, there usually are warning signs.

We no longer can be a country that worries about overreacting. It is too late for that. We need to have increased security in our schools, from police officers to metal detectors.

One of the main problems with our society is that we keep thinking that it will not happen to our schools, not to Kansas, not to anyone we know.

I predict that Ms. Cleo will die a slow, painful death.

OK, Collegian staff, so is the gunman a 15-year-old boy like it says in the lead of the story or is he 14 like it says in your little picture that you have on there?

Honestly, who actually buys an ad in the Collegian to campaign for the student senate?

Nicole Ohlde's picture is in the paper? Wow. Imagine that.

For anybody who thinks the alumni building is being built on budgeted money, it is all by donation. So don't talk about stuff you don't know about. It just makes you sound like an idiot.

Everything Eminem says, Eminem says just to piss you guys off. And it works. And you are falling right into his trap and he is an artist for that.

Would someone please explain to me the point of buying a hat, cutting it into a visor, then wearing it backwards and upside down? It just doesn't make sense to me.

I sure hope Governor Graves reconsiders cutting our funding. I mean, look around, a plague of robins has just doubled our enrollment.

I pay $2,000 a semester to live in the dorms and I haven't had dinner for two days because the dining hall keeps running out of food. And now I can't shower because our ceiling has caved in again. I am glad to see my money is being spent well.

If your kid is taking a gun to school you are not doing your job as a parent.

A life well lead

Homeless man teaches lessons in kindness, love, sharing

Bundled in mismatched coats and covered in blankets, he shields himself from the piercing wind that strikes him like the disgusted remarks from passersby.

His house is a cardboard box in which he is the warmest when he pushes the open end up against a building. His hair is curly and unbrushed, lengthy around the eyes and ungroomed.

To some, he is the subject of ridicule. To others, he is feared. To me, he is honored.

He is a homeless man who works the streets of downtown Denver with nothing more than a sign and a smile.

A couple months ago, I was asked to do something completely outside of my comfort zone. Attending a Christian conference in Denver, I was asked to take a blanket and linger on the streets of downtown Denver to find a homeless person to give it to.

It was part of an outreach day that was sponsored by the conference. The intent was to help those in need, but the experience was not only beneficial to the homeless people I met that day; it also was advantageous for me.

To say the least, I was not very excited to step out of my comfort zone. Until that day, I never thought I ever would have much contact with homeless people. It's not that I didn't want to or that I thought something was wrong with them. I just never thought it ever would happen.

Never in my wildest dreams did I think the day would come that I would be asked to approach a complete stranger on the streets and strike up a conversation.

I was terrified.

Heading out in groups of three, I joined two of my closest friends, and we began our journey onto the streets and into the world of the homeless.

Approximately five hours later, I ran into a man who completely changed my perspective on life.

As the sun was setting, I was beginning to worry that I wouldn't be able to distribute my blanket. I did not want to have to experience the embarrassment of returning to the conference with my blanket still in hand. Therefore, I was determined to find someone to give it to.

That was when I met him.

Sitting in the middle of a small park in downtown Denver, I ran into a man whose name always will be a mystery, but whose perspective on life will remain unforgettable.

Slowly approaching the man in the multiple coats and bright orange stocking cap, with his bags at his side, my stomach twisted and turned, tying itself in knots. But, as we approached, I saw the man's head perk up and his eyes widen. Handing him the blanket, his smile broke the tension and I found my voice.

"Could you use an extra blanket?" I heard myself say.

Thus began a conversation that changed my life. Here was a man who was homeless, but had more than most of us. With nothing but the clothes on his back and his books, he had more.

And, unlike some of us, he knew his place in this world.

After confessing how he used to be a bigshot guy in an advertising agency who wasn't afraid to step on people's toes to satisfy his greed, he confessed he likes his life on the streets in downtown Denver better.

A man without a home, living on the streets, showering intermittently at the local shelter likes his life better now than when he had a sophisticated job, money, a warm house and food on the table.

I thought to myself, "How can this be?"

However, after talking with the man for the next hour or so, he changed from being a "bum" into a man of great wisdom and encouragement.

He told me about the time he was given eight Thanksgiving dinners in one day. He conversed about the time he made $400 by holding a sign on the highway.

He even talked about the day an old woman gave him a pair of gloves with a $50 bill hidden in them after church one day. He continued to tell me that he didn't need the $50 that he received that day, so he cashed it in for $5 bills and distributed them among the other homeless people. This truly was a man with direction.

Imagine what you would do if someone gave you a free $50 bill. Pay your bills? Take your girlfriend to dinner and a movie? Go to Aggieville?

This man chose not to do any of these things. Instead, he chose to give it away.

This is an act from which all of us can learn.

It doesn't matter what kind of job you land someday. It doesn't matter how much money you make. It doesn't matter how big your house is or what kind of car you drive.

Will you be remembered after you die for these material things?

I suspect you will not.

Instead, you will be remembered for the lives you've touched. For the friends you've helped. For the children you've guided.

For the love you shared.

You will be remembered and honored for taking that $50 bill and cashing it in for $5 bills.

It's amazing what a little act of kindness can do. I hope some day I can be like the bum I met in downtown Denver.

He had nothing, but in nothing, he found a way to live with everything.

Celebrities should be held accountable for actions

All right everyone, here comes a little pop quiz. Don't panic; it's only one question.

Question: What's the difference between a celebrity and your average Joe?

Answer: Not much, besides a truckload of money.

I guess you could argue celebrities are very talented, but so are a lot of other people. I've met teachers and construction workers who are immensely talented, but that doesn't make them celebrities. Celebrities just happen to be gifted in certain high-profile occupations like athletics, acting or music.

Most people weren't born celebrities either. With some exceptions, celebrities probably had childhoods similar to most of ours. They went to school for eight hours a day. They had to deal with the playground bully. They wondered if Susie or Johnny liked them, too.

They also had to work hard before they gained their superstar status. I'm sure many of our pop icons practiced and perfected their craft in hopes of one day making it big. Along the way they might have even encountered a few hardships.

But then, something happened. These once ordinary people achieved the stardom they had been lusting after.

They finally made it to Easy Street. Her album went double platinum. He led his team to victory and gained a Super Bowl ring. Her movie was No. 1 at the box office. He finally got elected to office.

Somewhere along the yellow brick road to stardom, these people gained something else.

They were given a privilege us "ordinary people" don't have. Our superstars were granted immunity.

For some insane reason, many of our celebrities have become above the law. They don't have to pay the penalty when they commit crimes. When a celebrity does get caught breaking the law, they usually get no stronger punishment than a slap on the wrist.

Take, for example, Puff Daddy. His court case isn't the first time he's been in legal trouble. Puffy was taken to court a few years back for beating up a record executive after the executive failed to edit footage of Puffy in the Nas music video called "Hate Me Now."

Puffy should have been punished for his senseless act of violence, but instead he got off with nothing more than a legal slap on the wrist.

And once again, Puff Daddy is in court. There is debate on both sides as to whether Puffy actually had a gun or not and if he fired it into the air at a New York night club. If it is determined he had a gun, he should receive the full punishment the law can give him. I think it's unlikely this will happen. He'll probably get off with nothing more than a light community service sentence.

Most celebrities are told to help out the underprivileged in society by being sentenced to community service in order to absolve their crimes. Their agents usually take advantage of their community service outings by taking pictures and writing press releases about how great so-and-so is because he or she is willing to help the community. The celebrity then goes on to say how much the experience has changed their life and how they will never commit such-and-such a crime again. Of course, they mean they won't get caught committing the crime again.

The list of celebrities who get off easy when it comes to crimes is outrageous and intolerable. Celebrities are slapped on the wrist for violations ranging from drunk driving to drug abuse and even rape. Some even argue celebrities can get away with murder.

There is no logical reason why the crimes of celebrities should go unpunished. They are no better than you or I. The only main difference is money, which buys them privilege. Their talent does not make them greater than the law.

As long as celebrities continue to get away with committing crimes, our justice system will continue to be a farce of equality and fairness.

Council appointee deserved article on front page of paper

Editor:

Page two of the Feb. 27 Collegian featured quick summaries of stories from its online edition.

One of the stories mentioned is about Dale Herspring, head of the Department of Political Science, and his recent appointment to the Council on Foreign Relations, a premiere foreign policy organization in this country. Other members of this council include Secretary of State Colin Powell and National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice.

Is this worth a front-page article? You bet it is.

Instead of giving the spotlight to the many people on this campus who deserve recognition and praise, our own paper frequently buries these stories on the back page, puts them online or doesn't cover them at all.

In the meantime our paper reports so-called "news" such as an ex-K-State football player from 10 years ago who murdered his wife and even the New York murder trial of washed-up rapper and bad boy wannabe Puff Daddy.

But here we have an outstanding professor who received national recognition and he doesn't even get a headline.

Shame on you for overlooking commendable accomplishments past and present. What an honor for our university and also for Herspring.

Congratulations, Professor Herspring.

Privacy of party-goers violated by pictures placed on Internet

Editor:

Right now, many students are finishing up their tales from last weekend's parties and making plans for next week's adventures.

What students are neglecting are the possible consequences from partying. These students do not believe actions will be documented on camera and displayed on the Internet for a price.

This documentation is invasion of privacy, and it is increasing among K-State students every week.

This Web site, www.kstateunderground.com, is infringing on K-State students' rights every time someone logs into the site.

On K-StateUnderground, there are different levels of access to the site. At member access, ($15 fee), they have privileges to all material on the site.

Members can click on pages that have the upcoming parties and pictures from past parties.

Although one of the features on the Web site makes finding parties more efficient, one section should be removed from the Web site. The party pictures section contains illegal content among students, and posting these pictures could possibly be against the law.

These pictures posted on the site contain activities such as underage drinking and sexual nudity.

The people in the pictures do not know they are being displayed on the Internet unless they pay the $15 fee or are e-mailed the pictures from someone who does have a password.

The people who are in the pictures have a right to have their pictures taken off the site or a share of the income that K-StateUnderground earns.

At a party, one should be free to have fun without the fear of being violated. This includes invasion of privacy.

If having a picture taken and posted on this site, without the person's consent, means that K-State cannot party freely.

Sometimes partying seems like a necessity, but going out and drinking isn't the best way to solve problems of college life.

Partying is a great way to meet people and blow off stress, but going out and partying should not be a stressful event, but rather a stress-free event if one behaves appropriately.

Taking someone's rights away when they are having a good time is counterproductive and an invasion — an invasion of partying.

Next time there is a party, remember — a hangover is not as long lasting as a bad picture of yourself in an e-mail.

Article referring to allegations about sorority lacked detail

Editor:

Over the years, it has become a habit of mine to read magazines and newspapers from front to back, and more often than not I find that the stories and/or articles that cover the back pages belong there, and vice versa.

Upon reaching the front page of Tuesday's edition of the Collegian, however, I was disappointed to find a quite vague and obscure story to be the last to cross my path.

The article was written about those hazing-crazed greeks, specifically an allegation against the sorority Chi Omega.

The title caught my eye, for a few different reasons, but other than a catchy headline the story lacked both information and relevance to, seemingly, anyone who was not affiliated with Chi Omega.

I am frustrated by the printing of such an article that contained none of the necessary detail and specifics that make news news.

It was not that I wanted to hear that the women of Chi Omega had beaten a new member, and yet oddly, throughout the rest of the day, I heard many rumors sparked by the article.

In fact, I did not want to sit through the rest of my classes and hear, "Yeah, I heard that they made a girl drink so much that she passed out and almost died," or "I think they paddled someone," or "So-and-so told me that a girl got shoved into the trunk of a car with a jawbreaker in her mouth and duct-tape covering her lips."

The placement of the article, as well as its ridiculous lack of content, are the reason that such speculation and rumor began.

It is not up to the general public to "decide" what happened at Chi Omega, but it is a duty of the college newspaper to only report stories that have a point and at least a little fact. Such stories as this, not to mention the one about the FIJI's last semester and the Tri-Delt's the semester before that, create a very negative attitude toward the greek system and misconstrue the opinion of many on campus.

I am certainly not saying that the article should not have been printed, but perhaps it should not have graced the front page, accompanying articles with actual relevance to the student body as a whole.

The story should have been better detailed, and if specific comments could not be obtained, simply overlooked. It was not news, and it like many other articles printed by the Collegian about Greek Affairs, was far too elusive and uninformed.

The story was simply unimportant, other than to a rival sorority perhaps, and quite wrongly portrayed both the greeks and the women of Chi Omega:

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Cinderella's shoes were just a bit too large for K-State late Tuesday night.

Despite leading the No. 24 Lady Bears by as many as 11 in the first half, the Cats couldn't hang with Baylor's talented duo of All-Americans Sheila Lambert and Danielle Crookm down the stretch in a 44-60 loss in the Big 12 Tournament's first round.

"They just figured out a way to win," Baylor head coach Kim Mulkey-Robertson said afterwards. "They fought and clawed and gave everything they had."

"Even when they were in the lead and shooting lights out, the kids were giving everything they had." K-State was clicking on all cylinders to start the ballgame, using an 8-0 run to build an early 14-6 lead at the 14:59 mark.

Two consecutive Kristin Rethman three-pointers and one from Kim Woodlee gave K-State fans making the trip to Municipal Auditorium something to believe in during that stretch.

The Wildcat offense, however, would begin to unravel soon after.

"I thought this was a ballgame very much like most of the games we've played this season," head coach Deb Patterson said.

"We stayed competitive with them until the 4:56 mark of the first half, and then the game completely and totally changed."

Leading 26-15 at that point, K-State (12-16, 2-14) failed to score for the remainder of the half. The Cats' lack of productivity wasn't contagious, though, as Baylor (21-7, 9-7) rattled off 12 straight points to take a 29-26 lead at the intermission. Crookm, a member of the All-Big 12 first team, put on a clinic during that stretch, accounting for all but two of the Lady Bears' points in the run.

"We went through 12 possessions that we didn't convert on and had several turnovers," Patterson said. "We opened the door to a very explosive and potent Baylor basketball team, and that was a critical turning point."

"If we would have played those 20 minutes solid, we might have been in a position to build off that momentum."

K-State's nearly six-minute scoring drought ended early in the second half with Marshela Webb's jumper, but the damage already was done. The Lady Bears went on a 12-0 run to stretch the lead to 13, and K-State wouldn't mount a significant response to the charge.

"We obviously didn't regroup very well," senior guard Kim Woodlee said. "We knew we left the half not scoring, and Coach made that very obvious, but we slipped and couldn't convert. We've been having this problem for a while, and that's when they really stepped up."

K-State's 18 points in the final 20 minutes were a season low for the Cats in a half. Patterson said it was the worst her team has played in her recent memory.

"Unfortunately for us, our second half was, without question, the poorest 20 minutes of basketball we have played all season long, and probably in a couple of years," Patterson said. "I would credit Baylor's defensive effort with that."

Tuesday's game was the last in K-State legend Kim Woodlee's career. The senior guard moved into 17th place among NCAA three-point shooters of all time, but her six points weren't enough to down the Lady Bears.

As a result, Woodlee said it's hard to accept the finality the loss provided.

"I'm still in denial about it all," she said. "I still want to come out and practice tomorrow."

K-State's rebounding, strong Baylor offense lead to 44-60 loss

By DAN SMITH
Kansas State Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Rebounding has been an issue all season long for the K-State women's basketball team, and Tuesday night against Baylor, it might have cost them the game.

Thirty-two of Baylor's 60 total points in last night's contest came from the painted region of the Municipal Auditorium court occupied by All-American Lady Bear Danielle Crookm, an area that saw little resistance from the K-State defense. Sixteen of those points came from second-chance opportunities, complements of 21 Baylor offensive rebounds on the night.

"Danielle is a great player, offensively and defensively," K-State forward Nicole Ohlde said. "After a shot goes up, she'll find somebody and put a body on them. She just continues to work for rebounds."

Crookm grabbed a total of 11 boards on the night to lead both teams and established the Big 12's single-season record with her 332nd of the year at the 8:04 mark in the second half. Baylor, as a team, outrebounded the Cats 36-46 and missed its conference-leading team average by just one.

Crookm, who was named to the Women's Basketball Service's All-America team last week, also recorded her 18th double-double of the year, adding 19 points to her rebounding total. Senior post Monica Arnold was less of a factor this time around, though, scoring just two points, down from 14 last week against the Cats.

But the Lady Bears' potent offense was just one side of the Cats' problems in the paint Tuesday night. K-State managed just six points under the basket in the game's first frame and failed to convert on any of its four offensive rebounds.

"They were really physical, defensively," Ohlde said. "They forced all of us in the post to take some shots that were probably not some of the best that we could have taken, and that wasn't helping anything."

The Cats' starting post combination of Ohlde and senior Marshela Webb was unable to establish position against the offense," head coach Deb Patterson said. "As soon as we lose timing, get passive and lose that sense of flow, we're in big trouble. And that happened tonight against some very good defensive pressure."

K-State seemed to be out of sync all night. Even Ohlde, who this season posted a new freshman field goal percentage record, struggled, finishing the game with just nine points on four-of-17 shooting from the field.

As a team, K-State improved in the second half but couldn't find the right offensive or defensive package to compete with the Baylor post combination of Crookm, Arnold and junior forward Sheila Lambert, who accounted for 38 points throughout the course of the night.

taller and more physical Baylor post players much of the night and finished the game with just 13 total points on 23 shots in the post.

"We run a real timing-oriented offense," head coach Deb Patterson said.

Women prepare for next season, sign All-America recruit

By ERIKA SAUERWEIN
Kansas State Collegian

Almost an hour after Marysville High School's girls' basketball team has finished practice, senior Kendra Wecker and her father, Randy, still occupy the empty gymnasium.

Kendra shoots a free throw, her 100th of the night. Her father takes the rebound and passes it back. She then moves behind the three-point arch to shoot 100 more shots. In an hour, Kendra makes a total of 600 buckets.

Every day for four years, Wecker and her father have practiced together in the school gym.

Wecker's extra hours in the gym reveal her dedication. On the other side, Wecker's national win in the Punt, Pass and Kick contest shows her pure athleticism. By combining her commitment and talent, Wecker has evolved into arguably the best high school basketball player in state.

And K-State women's basketball program has signed the All-American.

"Kendra is one of the most talented female high school athletes and basketball players in the nation," K-State head coach Deb Patterson said. "Undersized at 5-feet, 11-inches in the post, her strength, athleticism, jumping ability and skills combine to make her a tremendous scorer, finisher and rebounder in the paint. Her strength and versatility combined with her ability to handle the basketball and to shoot jump shots and the three combine to make her one of the nation's best coming out of high school. I expect her to make an immediate impact in our program."

The two-time All-State forward averages a double-double, with 28.7 points per game. She also has moved into the top 10 in Kansas' all-time career points list and grabbed more than 1,000 rebounds in her career — stats that have both K-State fans and Wecker excited.

"I am excited," Wecker said. "I will be playing at that next level, and that has been my goal since I was kid. Things are always put in perspective when I would go to the national tournaments with the AAU team and see how awesome the other girls are. So when I got my first actual letter, I said 'Oh my gosh. It is really happening. I better get to work.'"

And Wecker has put in that work. Last weekend, Marysville continued its undefeated season by claiming the sub-state final game in Clay Center. On Saturday, the Bulldogs defeated Wamego 72-45. Wecker ended the game with 27 points, 13 rebounds and 10 assists — her second triple-double on the season.

"This is how I dreamed of my senior year going," she said. "This has by far been my best year. In the past seasons, I was concerned with points and rebounds, and this year I have picked it up a bit on assists. I think I am averaging seven a game. That is more than what I originally set out for myself."

The senior's game has improved but still hasn't come close to reaching her peak, Marysville head coach Mary Kessinger said.

"Her mental game is probably the biggest improvement I have seen," Kessinger said. "Every year she gets better and better at composing herself on the court and being able to handle situations — like getting fouled and not getting calls. Her dedication is just incredible."

Behind Wecker's lead, Marysville, the No. 1-ranked team in 4A, also is one of the best in the state. The team has traveled to Wichita, Kan., the past three years to play in the Kapaun Mt. Carmel Invitational and claimed the title twice. Wecker has taken home the All-Tournament Team medal three times and the MVP medal twice.

K-State professor studies media violence; parents, industry key to solving problem

By COLLEEN FOOTE
Kansas State Collegian

A K-State professor has been researching the television dilemma of violence versus entertainment for more than 30 years.

John Murray, an expert on television violence and professor of family studies and human services, said the three main effects of viewing media violence are aggression, desensitization and fear. These effects are the consensus of research he has collected.

"This isn't some isolated issue," said Murray, a former employee of the surgeon general. "This has been simmering for a long time, and at some point we're going to have to come to grips with how we're going to deal with the ever-escalating violence."

Some of the ways Murray said he thinks will help solve problems caused by media violence include parents taking a more active role and expressing concern about the type of television their children are watching.

The television industry also has a role to play by making sure the rating systems are clear, he said.

"Television and film violence are a part of these influences, but they are not the sole cause," Murray said. "There are many things that can be done to address the concerns about television violence."

Murray recently was subpoenaed by the prosecution in a Broward County, Fla., case to testify on pro-wrestling's impact on children's violence. Lionel Tate, 12, was convicted of first-degree murder after he attempted to imitate the pro-wrestling he had seen on television on a 6-year-old playmate by punching, kicking and stomping her to death.

Murray said he was surprised he was subpoenaed by the prosecutor in the case instead of the defense. The reason he was subpoenaed by the prosecutor is because in Florida there is no diminished responsibility clause in the criminal laws, and the defendants would have to be found insane.

Murray was barred from testifying when the judge ruled that testimony about media violence was not relevant. This was a bad call by the judge, Murray said.

"I'm not a lawyer or a judge, but he should have heard some testimony," he said. "I do believe media violence played a role with this case."

Murray said he expects more cases involving television's effect on children to occur since television is displaying ever-increasing levels of violence that will not go away.

"Violence on television probably did have a little to do with the Columbine incident," he said. "Some high school students may watch violence and think it's OK to take action and lash out at others and part of the mix of viewing the world as a mean and ugly place."

His most recent research involves mapping children's brains as they watch video violence. Murray, in collaboration with the University of Texas Health Sciences Center and the Mind Science Foundation, studied youths who viewed televised violent and nonviolent video sequences while brain activations were measured.

Their research found the interpretation of the premotor cortex activation while viewing violence suggests that the subjects were attempting to imitate the boxing sequences they viewed from watching violent boxing clips from "Rocky IV."

The study suggests the children were storing entertainment violence like a post-traumatic stress memory instead of the violence arousing fear or aggression in the brain, he said.

Tom Grimes, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, has done research projects with Murray. Grimes said he views Murray as a valuable colleague. Even though they have opposite viewpoints, Grimes said he believes a person must be psychologically ill to be affected by television violence.

"He takes the subject matter he deals with seriously," Grimes said.

MICHAEL YOUNG/Collegian

Professor of family studies and human services John Murray, an expert on television violence, said he believes there are three main effects of media violence: aggression, desensitization and fear. Murray said he believes parents getting more involved and voicing their opinions could help solve some of these problems.

"There aren't a lot of professors like him in the social science departments, and I wish we had more like him."

Lori Bergen, professor and associate director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, said she considers Murray to be a highly respected colleague and a friend who has contributed and given a lot of national attention to K-State.

"The wonderful thing about

John is that he agrees to disagree," she said. "He is the quintessential scholar who embraces the notion that scholarship is about debate, and he deals with issues that not very many people know about."

Murray said he hopes to continue doing more studies like the brain mapping on youths again in the future.

"There is still a lot to learn about television violence and its effects on children," he said.

Campaign ad worker indicted for perjury

By KAREN GULLO
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A federal grand jury Tuesday indicted a former employee of a media company that handled ads for President George W. Bush's campaign in connection with the release of a Bush debate tape to Vice President Al Gore's campaign.

Juanita Yvette Lozano of Austin, Texas, was charged with mail fraud, false statements to the FBI and perjury. If convicted, she faces 15 years in prison and a $750,000 fine. The indictment was handed up by a federal grand jury in Texas.

Lozano worked for Maverick Media, an Austin company that handled Bush's political ads.

The indictment alleged that Lozano secretly copied more than 120 pages of debate preparation documents and a 60-minute videotape of a debate preparation session with Bush and his advisers and sent it to the Gore campaign under a different name.

She lied to FBI agents investigating the matter and testified falsely before the grand jury, the indictment said.

Attempts to reach Lozano in Austin were not immediately successful, and her attorney, Christopher Gunter, was not immediately available, his office said.

Lozano sent the package to former Rep. Tom Downey, who was helping Gore prepare for debates, with a note bearing the name "Amy Smith," the indictment alleged.

It quoted the note as saying: "I will call you soon to find out what other materials can be useful to the VP."

Downey turned the package over to the FBI, which began an investigation.

The FBI obtained a videotape from a surveillance camera at the post office where the package was mailed.

The tape showed Lozano mailing a package at a time that corresponded to when the debate package was mailed, law enforcement officials have said.

At the time, Lozano said she was mailing a pair of khakis back to The Gap for her boss, Mark McKinnon, a top Bush adviser.

Deputy White House Press Secretary Scott McClellan, speaking to reporters aboard Air Force One, said: "We said all along that no one is more interested than us to get to the bottom of this. People are innocent until proven guilty. If these allegations were proven true, we would be very surprised and very disappointed."

Asked whether President Bush still had confidence in McKinnon, he said, "Absolutely. The president has great trust in Mark McKinnon."

McClellan said he did not know whether either McKinnon or the woman still work for the White House or the Republican National Committee.

Democratic officials in Austin have said that Lozano was a precinct chairwoman for the Democratic Party.

Lozano denied mailing the package to Downey when she was interviewed by the FBI in September and when she testified before the grand jury, the indictment said.

Contrary to her statements, it said, Lozano schemed "to use her position as a trusted employee of Maverick Media ... to obtain access to the Bush Campaign's confidential and sensitive debate preparation materials ... to assist Gore in his preparation for the presidential debates."

In charging her with mail fraud, the indictment said Lozano defrauded the Bush campaign of confidential work products and defrauded Maverick Media of her honest services.

The case is being prosecuted by the public integrity section of the Justice Department.

Student disqualified from elections

By MICHELLE BERTUGLIA
Kansas State Collegian

Two students pleaded guilty and one will be disqualified from the Student Governing Association elections, Dustin Petrik, Student Senate elections chair, said Tuesday night after the Election Committee's violations hearing.

Curt Summers, Arts and Sciences Senate candidate, will be disqualified from the elections for failing to turn in his expense report, Petrik said.

Petrik would not release the names of the other two students who pleaded guilty for failing to turn in expense reports but said they were fined $10 each.

The expense reports were due by 4 p.m. Friday in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Petrik said about 35 candidates failed to meet this deadline.

Petrik said if the candidates turned in their reports after the Friday deadline, they were fined $5. If they turned in their reports by 4 p.m. Monday, they were fined $10.

Petrik said he is surprised so many did not turn their expense reports in on time.

"Personally, I thought those numbers were high," Petrik said. "I think it was a matter of people not reading the regulations and not paying attention at the mandatory meeting."

It could have been a lack of effort or just a simple misunderstanding.

Petrik said one candidate who did not turn in an expense report, Misty Cooper, an Arts and Sciences Senate candidate, withdrew her candidacy last night.

SGA ELECTIONS

Robin Eubank, Human Ecology Council candidate, originally was listed for not having filed a report.

Eubank did file an expense report, but it was clipped behind some other candidates' reports and was not found by the committee until Tuesday.

Petrik said there were some who did not spend any money on their campaigns and thought they didn't have to turn in an expense report, but Petrik said everyone had to turn in a report, regardless of whether they spent any money.

Election results will be broadcast tonight

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Stephanie Bonnell said she jumps at any chance to be in front of the cameras.

Bonnell, senior in public relations and electronic journalism, is involved in the production of the K-State Student Election 2001, a broadcast of the election results at 8 tonight on cable channel 8.

"They e-mailed our Advanced Electronic News Reporting class and asked for volunteers," Bonnell said. "I was the first one to call back, and they just kinda threw me into it."

Bonnell, who is serving as the producer of the show, said this is her first year to be involved in the elections broadcast.

"This last week, I have constantly been researching and preparing for the show," she said. "It has really been crazy. There is so much work to do as the producer."

Bonnell said she mediated the student body presidential and vice presidential debate for KSDB-FM 91.9 to prepare for tonight's broadcast.

"It really caught me up on the issues," she said. "I also watched the tape from last year and saw what mistakes were made, so hopefully we can correct those in our production."

The live broadcast will feature interviews with Dustin Petrik, Student Senate Elections Committee chair, and Gayle Spencer, director of student affairs.

"They should be really good interviews," she said. "They are really informed on the issues and the candidates and will be able to give us a lot of information."

Besides announcing the results of the elections, Bonnell said they will feature live interviews with the new student body president and vice president.

"We will get them on the air as soon as they can get over to Dole Hall," she said. "They will be the ending to our show."

Besides Bonnell, the staff of the broadcast consists of three other students. Jenn Kehlei will serve as production assistant and Christina Hoggatt and Natalia Farmer will serve as on-air anchors.

Farmer, senior in electronic broadcast, said Bonnell has been the driving force behind the broadcast.

"She has done lots of research," Farmer said. "She really knows what she is doing. She does a great job and is always on top of things."

Bonnell said she is not nervous about the show, but she is anxious.

"It is live air, so anything could go wrong, but I really think things are going to run smoothly," Bonnell said.

"I am excited to see how the project will all come together because we have all been working so hard."

Judge voids Internet adoption

By BRIAN SKOLOFF
The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — An Arkansas judge Tuesday nullified the adoption of twin 8-month-old girls caught up in an international custody battle.

The girls were adopted in Arkansas on Dec. 22 by a British couple, setting off a dispute with an American couple who also had tried to adopt the children through the same Internet broker.

Pulaski County Probate Judge Mackie Pierce said Tuesday that neither the British couple nor the American birth mother, who put them up for adoption, met Arkansas' 30-day residency requirement. As a result, the Arkansas courts had no right to grant the adoption, Pierce said.

Pierce also recommended to British courts that the children be returned to the United States for further proceedings on who should get custody.

Richard and Vickie Allen of Highland, Calif., said they paid a $6,000 fee to a San Diego-based Internet adoption broker. They said they had custody of the girls for nearly two months and were in the process of legally adopting them when the children were taken to Arkansas by Tranda Wecker, the twins' birth mother.

Alan and Judith Kilshaw of Wales said they paid $12,000 for the same children and adopted them from Wecker in Little Rock.

Both the Allens and Kilshaws, as well as the girls' now-separated biological parents, Tranda and Aaron Wecker, are seeking custody of the girls. The girls now are in foster care in Britain.

"We think it is important that the British court be notified of this decision. I do think this certainly paves the way for the British court to return the twins to the U.S.," said Wecker's lawyer, Gloria Allred, who said her client would not speak publicly about the case.

The judge was ruling on a motion from the Allens, who had sought to nullify the Kilshaws' adoption. The judge said the Allens did not have standing to ask that the adoption be voided, but that based on his own review of the case, he had decided to nullify the adoption.

Pierce's order said Tranda Wecker had the right to take the children from the Allens but was required to live in Arkansas for 30 days before putting the children up for adoption there.

"An adoption order is fatally defective where neither ... the prospective adoptive parents nor the minors sought to be adopted were residents of the county," Pierce wrote. "If Tranda Wecker engaged in any fraud or deception regarding her residency, this court will not reward this bad conduct."

Pierce asked that the British High Court of Justice return the twins to the United States and suggested that a St. Louis court would be the proper forum for further proceedings.

Autopsy photos anger race fans

By MIKE SCHNEIDER
The Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Orlando Sentinel's request for the autopsy photos of Dale Earnhardt has brought a torrent of angry calls and e-mail from race fans and prompted an effort by lawmakers to prevent the release of such pictures in future cases.

In the past two days, Sentinel Editor Tim Franklin has taken about 3,000 of the almost 7,000 e-mails and calls.

"Some of the e-mails have been quite ugly, but I understand it's an emotional issue," Franklin said.

"While we feel sorry for the Earnhardt family and what they're going through, there's a big issue here about NASCAR safety, and we're simply trying to provide more information about how Dale Earnhardt died."

Franklin repeatedly has said the newspaper has no intention of publishing the photos but wants to view them so a head trauma expert can make an independent determination of the cause of death.

The Sentinel ran a series last month that showed three NASCAR drivers who died last year suffered fractures at the base of the skull.

"He's the fourth driver in nine months to die," Franklin said. "This isn't a fight that we seek or asked for, but we believe that there are big issues at stake here as far as NASCAR safety."

There's also a big principle at stake: access to state records. Fans also have sent more than 12,000 e-mails to Gov. Jeb Bush and state lawmakers, asking them to intervene.

Three Republican lawmakers are drafting legislation that would prohibit the release of any autopsy photographs. Such photos would be treated as private medical records.

Judge Joseph Will issued a temporary injunction against the photos' release, saying they have no bona fide newsworthiness and could cause the family additional anguish and grief.

A hearing is set for Thursday.

ARMY DIVISIONS

Play focuses on racial equality, murder during World War II

By JJ DUNCAN

Kansas State Collegian

A war within a war is the subject of the new Ebony Theatre Company production of "A Soldier's Play."

The play details the investigation into the murder of a black sergeant when the Army was divided by black and white.

The play is set during World War II before black soldiers were sent to fight. Maurice Parks, who plays Corporal Ellis, said "A Soldier's Play" deals with another kind of war.

"The play talks about the war that they didn't fight on the front," he said. "It's about the fight within the army that was on the home front, for equality."

The investigation, led by a black captain, pits blacks and whites against each other in the Army.

With the historic background of the play, director Tiffany Lee said there was a great deal of research and education that went into the production because she said she wants to achieve realism. Three men were brought in at separate times to teach the cast different aspects of World War II and the military, Lee said.

Sgt. Calvin Lee was brought in to tell the cast about the details of military life. A World War II veteran told them historic background about the war. Capt. Robert McNair taught the cast drills and commands, Tiffany Lee said.

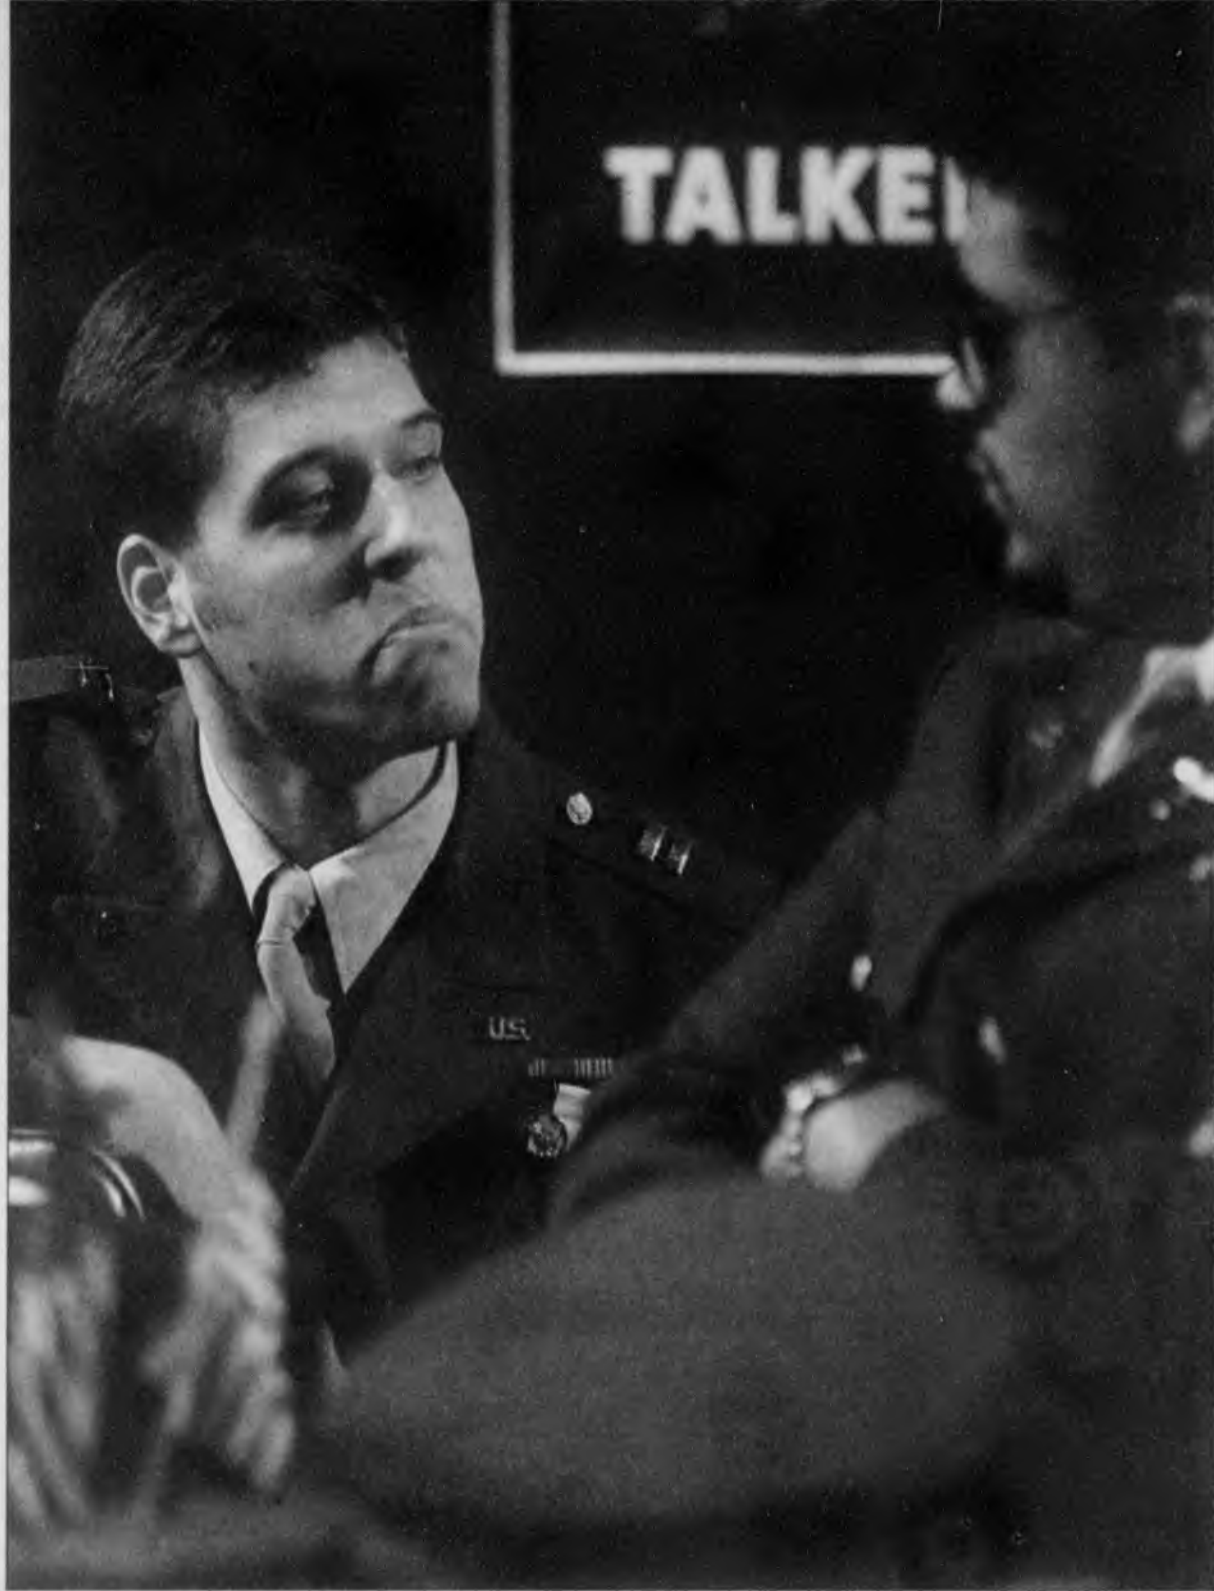

"A lot of research went into this play," she said. "Even the posters on the back wall are authentic. We didn't want to insult veterans by not getting it right because that's something they put their lives into."

She said she hopes people will see how the issues and problems taken on in the play still happen sometimes in the modern world. When looking for a script she wants to direct, Lee said she tries to find something with a message.

"I can't handle frivolous scripts or scripts that don't go anywhere," she said. "I wanted to find something that has some kind of message and is good for the actors I have available."

Ebony Theatre productions traditionally have more available parts for black actors, and nine of the 12 roles in "A Soldier's Play" are for black men.

Plays performed by Ebony Theatre give black actors a chance to show their talent,

MICHAEL YOUNG/Collegian

Ryan Mott, sophomore in computer engineering, goes through a dress rehearsal Monday night. Mott is playing the part of Capt. Charles Taylor in the Ebony Theater production of "A Soldier's Play."

More Information

"A Soldier's Play" will show at the Purple Masque Theatre at 8 p.m. Thursday and Friday and at 1 p.m. and 8 p.m. Saturday. The price is $4 with a student ID and $6 for the public.

Diontey Moore, who plays Pvt. Peterson, said.

"When you try out for a play, if there aren't any African-American roles, you get passed up, but Ebony Theatre gives actors like me a better chance to perform," Moore, freshman in theater, said.

Coming from a small town with a lack of diversity, Ryan Mott, who plays Capt. Taylor, said it has been a good experience being in the play.

"I've probably learned more from being a part of this production than from my classes this year, as far as cultural diversity," Mott, sophomore in computer engineering, said.

Keenan Ramos, who plays Private Smalls, said he thinks the actors work together well to make the play work.

"This group of guys has gelled really well to make the play a great success," Ramos, freshman in theater, said.

"We've come so far since the first day we began rehearsals." The perspective of the black soldier is one that isn't often discussed in plays and movies about World War II, Parks said, so it is refreshing to see a play that shows the struggles blacks had in the military before they even were allowed to fight, he said.

"A Soldier's Play" is recommended for mature audiences because of themes dealing with violence and some language, Lee said.

She said she hopes those who do come will enjoy the show.

"It's a good show. It's well acted and has a good script, and it isn't expensive," Lee said.

Grateful Dead tribute band to perform in Aggieville

By KRISTEN DYMACEK

Kansas State Collegian

The Dead will come alive in Aggieville tonight.

The Grateful Dead tribute band, The Schwag, will be performing a selection of the Dead's songs beginning around 9:30 p.m. at Joe's Tap Room.

Vocalist and bassist Jimmy Tebeau said the St. Louis-based band, which played in Manhattan about a month and a half ago, knows about 200 of the 700 songs the Grateful Dead played.

"We get through about 20 to 25 a night," Tebeau said.

"We won't repeat any songs, so the ones that saw our show last time will see a totally different show Wednesday."

The Schwag, which has been playing together since 1992, became a tribute band because of the love for Grateful Dead music, Tebeau said.

"I've seen the Dead over 77 times live," he said. "We love playing this music so much. There's a certain energy there."

He said fans of the Grateful Dead still want to hear the band's music, even though lead singer Jerry Garcia is dead.

"The demand has

The Schwag

Cost is $5 to get into the 21-and-older show. For more information about the band, visit www.theschwag.com.

increased since then," he said. "I think they all have Garcia withdrawal."

The tribute band plays about 200 shows a year in 17 states, Tebeau said, and has opened for bands, including Little Feat, String Cheese Incident, the David Grisman Quintet and Leftover Salmon.

Tebeau said The Schwag, which will bring four members of the six-member band, is looking forward to playing in Manhattan again.

"We can play there any night of the week and get a good turnout," he said. "We get so many e-mails from people in Manhattan, asking us to come back. The fans are real appreciative."

Terry Wark, Joe's Tap Room general manager, said the turnout at the last concert was big, so the band was invited back to perform again.

"It was a great turnout," Wark said. "There are a lot of Dead Heads out there. The Schwag has a lot of fans here." But it's not just Dead Heads who enjoy the tribute band, Tebeau said.

"No matter what kind of people come to see it, they always enjoy it," he said. "The way we play it, it cuts across other demographics because we cover such a wide range of musical style."

He said part of the attraction is the way the show changes every time.

"It's heavy, electric, improvisational rock. We don't even know what's going to happen next due to the improvisation," Tebeau said. "The music just pretty much speaks for itself. We are just taking listeners on a musical joyride."

Kendra is successful just because she only faces 4A competition," said Kapaun Mt. Carmel girls head coach Rod Browning. "Out of the nine games she has played in our tournament, Wecker averaged 24 points a game and that's against 5A and 6A teams. She can do anything. She could play for our boys' team."

But perhaps what is most impressive is her modesty.

Wecker plays confidently, not cocky, her father said. She tells her extraordinary stories very matter-of-factly, a trait echoed by her father.

"I try not to brag on Kendra's talents, but if there is one thing that she is good at it is that she is keeping this all in perspective," Randy Wecker said. "Humility is preached in our house. Success can be here today and gone tomorrow, so you can't dwell on it."

"Kendra has had so many opportunities. I wish other kids could experience some of the things she has done. There are millions of kids out there with the same ability that haven't had the opportunities she has had. For some reason, God has allowed us to experience this and, I don't know why, but we are thankful."

Regardless, Wecker is bringing her talents and experiences to K-State next fall, where she will unite with former AAU teammates Nicole Ohlde and Laurie Koehn.

"One of the main reasons I picked to go to K-State was because Nicole and Laurie are there," she said. "It will be fun to play with them again. And the girls that are already down there and the coaching staff are just awesome."

KELLY GLASSCOCK/Collegian

Kendra Wecker from Marysville passes the ball to a teammate during a sub-state game against Wamego High School. K-State recently signed Wecker.

Meanwhile, Wecker continues to make the trip to the gym. She has state competition this weekend to prepare for. But the biggest part of her career lies ahead.

"I want to get better and improve," she said. "I have a lot of natural God-given talent, but I work to get better. Everything doesn't just come easily for me. I know that Division I is a new level of the game, so I am going to have to be stronger.

"I just can't stop working."

for the increase.

If the entire 19-percent increase is approved, Mayor Karen McCulloh said K-State's costs would increase by an estimated $940,000 annually.

In addition, Wichita, which is located in the former Kansas Gas & Electric area, has interests in sharing the costs of its Wolf Creek Power Plant with KPL areas.

Commissioner Ed Klimek questioned the need to spend money for representation due to the possibility KCC might deny or reduce Western Resources' request by itself.

John Frieden, attorney with the legal firm representing the consortium, said Wichita's request could cause rates to rise past 19 percent and possibly up to 25 percent, and Wichita has been victorious before. By donating to the consortium, KPL cities will have their say before the KCC makes its decision, he said, unlike a similar 1997 case when Wichita's rate lowered and KPL cities took up the slack.

"If someone is not there representing the KPL area, the same thing will happen," Frieden said. "If you see Wichita in the mix, you should have someone there looking out for your interests."

As for the 19-percent increase without Wichita, Frieden said early studies suggest the KPL area doesn't need all of the new proposed equipment, especially if money made selling extra power to outside areas was applied to debts, instead of being paid to Western Resources' shareholders.

Hoping for a total budget of $250,000, Frieden said he hopes the consortium representation will prevent or reduce the rate increase and set a precedent, so it isn't repeated each year.

"Cities shouldn't have to be involved in this. I would hope that this puts an end to it," he said.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said he supports the action, and he said he thinks $17,500 is well invested, even if the rates only increase by 10 percent instead of 20 percent. In addition, he said this would establish an energy policy in the state as to what the utility company can and cannot get away with.

"We're the little guys in this, and we need to stick together to get a fair shake in front of the KCC," Snead said.

"It is the principle of whether or not a rate increase should be justified."

The rate case is scheduled to come before the KCC this April, with the consortium's material to be filed by April 1.

Law said the college, acting in compliance with the hiring freeze, already has suffered a loss.

"We interviewed a very qualified young woman last week and couldn't offer her the position," he said.

That position is one the Department of Landscape Architecture/Regional and Community Planning needed to fill in order to preserve their accreditation planning program.

"It's really going to hurt us," Dan Donelin, head of the department, said.

"We have to have five qualified members of faculty to maintain accreditation, and we only have four."

Kremer, who has been at K-State since 1973, said the university constantly is at or near the bottom of the Big 12 Conference schools in terms of faculty salaries.

"When financial resources are reduced further, the impacts are going to be very damaging," he said. "We're already on a minimum calorie diet."

Not only is the elimination of faculty a potential result of the cuts, but it also puts the ability of students to complete their degree in a normal amount of time in jeopardy.

"I see a very high probability that students won't graduate in a timely fashion," Law said.

He said it might come down to some courses, which normally are offered each semester, to only be offered once a year.

"We could be seeing the end of a four-year degree," he said. "For our college, it's particularly bad because we already have a five-year degree and if students know they will have to go longer, they may choose another major."

Addie Johnson, senior in architecture, said she thinks there are other places where cuts could be made.

"They're attempting to cut teaching positions that will extend our stay further, and we already have an intense five-year program," Johnson said. "It seems like cuts are being made that are completely affecting our education."

She said all of the students in the college were notified to have parents or themselves contact their state representatives.

Law organized an all-college forum in order for the students to gain a better understanding of the issues and effects that Legislative decisions will make.

Another area of concern for the college is the loss of the technology fee.

Each year the college gets about $100,000 to keep lab equipment up-to-date.

"If this is cut, we'd go quickly from being one of the most advanced colleges in the country to nothing," Law said.

"This will make it hard to recruit students."

The college's budget basically is separated into two parts, he said. The first part is used for salaries, and the second is for other operating expenses, such as lights and phones.

"The OOE keeps taking hits, and now we have to protect it," he said.

"We've talked about turning off the lights early, but we can't because students are working in the studios," he said. "We've manipulated the thermostat and even talked about shutting down the phones."

Also in jeopardy are funds the college uses to award faculty for doing exceptional work.

"It makes my job more difficult because it takes away what modest discretionary funds we have," said James S. Jones, professor of architecture and head of the Department of Architecture.

"That money will be gone, as well as any support of scholarly activities for students."

Kremer said he agreed that a loss of money would hurt students' educational advancement.

"Our budgets are so tight — so minimal — that opportunities for faculty and student travel and activities are being lost," he said.

Kremer said another concern of his was getting continued support from people outside the university.

"It's a rule of thumb that people usually want to give money to support something that's succeeding," he said. "K-State is succeeding, but when bad news surfaces, people are reluctant to give to something that's floundering."

Whether university officials successfully lobby the Legislature to limit the possible budget cuts, Jones said it was necessary to convey one message to them.

"Our institutions are severely under-supported," Jones said. "Higher learning is a community responsibility, and we have to convey this to the Legislature."

"A beer keg is equivalent to 175 cans of beer," he said. "If we reduce the access to that huge quantities of beer, it will reduce how much alcohol minors consume."

Rickel said he disagreed and said he thinks the legislature needs to spend time and money on something that will be more effective in decreasing underage drinking.

"We don't like to see any underage drinking," he said, "but this bill is basically going to encourage them to stop buying one thing and start buying another."

Matt Walters, governmental relations chair for Student Senate, said he agreed that minors will look for other resources if this bill passes.

"They are going to find a way to drink," Walters said. "I think this has proven itself from past experiences."

Beer keg bills have been introduced and received hearings in recent years, but have never cleared a committee. Senate will look at taking an official stand on the issue in the coming weeks, Walters said.

"We looked at it, but we didn't think the bill would move anywhere," he said. "The biggest thing I fear right now is that even members of the House and the Senate don't support the idea, but will vote for it because 'no' is such an unpopular vote with many of their constituents. I am afraid they may be swayed by the consequences."

Lenkner, Barker to face off

■ Runoff election next week to determine office; candidates prepare for more campaigning.

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Two of the five presidential candidates will have six more days of campaigning after a close race in the election polls.

The two tickets — Kyle Barker/Brandon Kauffman and Travis Lenkner/Mary Bosco — will face each other Tuesday in a run-off election.

Lenkner, senior in print journalism and pre-law, said he and his running mate, Bosco, senior in public relations, are pleased with the results, but will look at the runoff race as a new campaign.

"It is a whole new race next week," Lenkner said. "We came out ahead, but by no means are we going to stay ahead. This will be a tight race."

The general election results post the closest race in several years, with Lenkner and Bosco receiving 1,285 votes, or 34.3 percent of the total votes, and Barker and Kauffman receiving 906 votes, or 24.2 percent of the total votes.

Barker, junior in public relations and political science, said he and his running mate, Kauffman, junior in political science, are confident they can make up the narrow margin.

"We have worked really hard to get our views out," Barker said. "We knew we had a lot of support, and we are going to keep campaigning to let more students know how we stand and why we deserve the positions."

Dustin Petrik, Student Senate Elections Committee chair, said he was sure there would be a runoff, but he had no idea the results would be this close.

"Not only was it close between the top two candidates, but the third ticket was really in the running," Petrik said. "They had a lot of support, and it is too bad they had to be knocked out of the race."

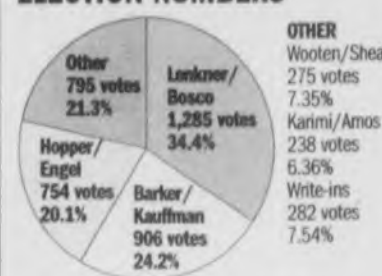

Ben Hopper and Eric Engel trailed the runoff candidates with 754 votes, or 20.2 percent of the total votes.

"There were three really strong candidates," Petrik said, "which says that any of the tickets could have won the race on any given day. It is going to be a close runoff."

Petrik said he is anxious about the next

Student body presidential and vice presidential candidates Travis Lenkner and Mary Bosco appeared calm and collected in the final minutes preceding the announcement of Student Governing Association election results.

As their supporters gathered at the Alpha Delta Pi house, the duo mingled, periodically glancing at their watches.

The announcement that Lenkner and Bosco would be in the runoff election Tuesday set cheers throughout the house. The duo remained calm after the announcement, but relief was apparent as smiles adorned their faces.

"When you want something this bad, a little nervousness is OK," Bosco, senior in public relations, said. "Right now, we're just pleased."

Lenkner said it's hard to come up with a single response to the election results.

"You go in not knowing what to expect," said Lenkner, senior in print journalism and pre-law. "Your first indication is when you get the results."

The close margin didn't surprise them. Lenkner said he knew it wasn't a sure win for anybody.

"We knew there were several good candidates with good campaigns," Lenkner said.

Lenkner and Bosco will be running against candidates Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman in the runoff election.

The candidates' supporters weren't surprised by the news of a runoff election.

"I don't think anyone's surprised," Meredith Seitz, sophomore in Barker, Kauffman celebrate outcome

The mood was calm and collected Wednesday night at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque in Aggieville. Student body presidential candidate Kyle Barker visited with friends and supporters as vice presidential candidate Brandon Kauffman joined in a game of pool.

But everything changed shortly after 8 p.m.

Enthusiastic cheers erupted as televisions in the bar proclaimed not a victory, but a runoff election between Barker/Kauffman and opponents Travis Lenkner/Mary Bosco.

"This means so much to us, and we're really excited," said Barker. "It's awesome to know that there are people who believe in us."

Barker/Kauffman received 906 of the 3,704 votes cast, giving the pair a 24.2 percent of the total votes. Lenkner/Bosco received 1,285 votes, placing them at 34.3 percent.

The elections yielded a 19-percent voter turnout, the highest in four years. Barker said he was impressed by the voter turnout.

"It's great to see that so many people turned out to vote," he said. "This is the highest percent that's turned out in several years. We think that this election is really bringing out good ideas."

Supporters of Barker/Kauffman gathered at Pat's to share encouragement and later congratulate the candidates.

Logan Andrews, sophomore in business management, said he is happy to see Barker/Kauffman's success, but additional work lies ahead.

"We've all worked really hard on this campaign," he said. "It's good Alleged threats of harm lead to 2 local youths' suspension

By APRIL MIDDLETON
Kansas State Collegian

Two students at Susan B. Anthony Middle School in Manhattan have been suspended pending investigations of threats made to harm other students and teachers.

"Two students at Anthony school were reported by classmates to have made threats to harm other students and teachers during the school day tomorrow," said Angie Cohorst, director of communications at the school, Wednesday.

Cohorst said the Riley County Police Department was contacted immediately, and the two students were removed.

RCPD Capt. Gary Grubbs said criminal threats by the students are being investigated, but no further information is available.

"Pending investigations, the two students have been suspended for the remainder of the week," Cohorst said.

Cohorst said the school commends the students who reported the threats to the administration.

1 wounded in latest school shooting

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. — A 14-year-old girl shot a fellow eighth-grader in the cafeteria of a Roman Catholic school Wednesday before being subdued by a school administrator, officials said.

The shooting happened around noon during lunch at Bishop Neumann Junior-Senior High School and followed a long-standing argument between the shooter and 13-year-old victim, police said.

"This is a situation of a student who was upset with another student," police officer David Ritter said. "This is not a random act of violence, and as far as I understand, there are no other targets for this violence."

Kimberly Marchese was shot in the right shoulder and was in stable condition at Geisinger Medical Center in Danville, authorities said.

The shooting suspect was in police custody within four minutes, Ritter said.

"It is my understanding that an administrator got the gun away from the girl and that she is in custody," said Maria Orzel, a spokeswoman for the Diocese of Scranton.

The suspect was being questioned and was to be taken to a juvenile facility, authorities said. Police said they did not know where the girl got the gun.

Authorities said they would need to petition a court in order to charge her as an adult. They would not say whether they planned to do so.

After the shooting, all students at the school were taken to the auditorium, where they were patted down by police in a search for weapons. Lycoming County District Attorney Thomas Marino said. Students were later taken to a nearby school, where they were questioned, he said.

Marchese originally was taken to Williamsport Hospital but she later was airlifted to Geisinger, 90 miles away.

The school has about 230 students in grades seven through 12. Williamsport, home to the Little League World Series, is in central Pennsylvania, about 160 miles northwest of Philadelphia.

The violence came two days after two people were killed and 13 wounded in a high school shooting in Santee, Calif. A ninth grader has been arrested.

News of the weird

Erik Sprague, a doctoral student in philosophy in Albany, N.Y., has undergone several body modifications (teeth sharpened, tongue forked, forehead bumps implanted, "scales" tattooed) in order to appear like a reptile, according to December wire service reports. Sprague, described as an excellent student by a professor, told reporters he knows of four other people who have made such single-theme conversions (as a zebra, tiger, leopard and a giant puzzle called "The Enigma"). He will appear on the TBS show "Ripley's Believe It or Not."

Students, faculty return to school after shooting

SANTEE, Calif. — Students and teachers returned to Santana High School on Wednesday, two days after their world was upended by a fellow student with a handgun and a reservoir of rage.

About 150 counselors were on campus — one for every classroom — and walls were patched to cover the bullet holes left by Monday's shooting.

"It's going to be a tough day," senior Brian Finkel, 18, said.

The school's 1,900 students will spend the day talking with teachers, administrators, counselors and one another. There are no immediate plans to resume regular classes.

"The first priority will be to begin the healing process," said Granger Ward, superintendent of the Grossmont Union High School District. "There's a lot of anger. There's a lot of grief. There's a lot of sadness."

Two students died and 13 people were wounded in the attack. Another was injured while driving away in a car. Three victims who remained hospitalized

Wednesday were reported in good condition.

Charles Andrew Williams, 15, was scheduled to be arraigned on murder and other charges Wednesday afternoon in San Diego.

Three students who might have known about Williams' alleged plans were kept out of classes while district officials investigate, Ward said.

Among them is Vanessa Willis, a 15-year-old neighbor of Williams who heard his threats to start a shooting spree, but thought they were a joke.

She said she didn't care if students were upset that she has spoken up about classmates teasing Williams.

"I feel bad for everyone that was hurt and everything, but they want to be mad at me. ... They don't know the whole story," she said.

State House rejects bill to extend life of lottery

TOPEKA — The House narrowly rejected a compromise bill Wednesday to extend the Kansas Lottery's life in a vote some members said had more to do with wounded pride than policy.

The 63-60 vote sent the measure back to a conference committee of House and Senate negotiators, who were to meet again later in the day.

The proposal faced opposition in the House because negotiators didn't include a provision to set aside $4 million in lottery revenues to subsidize Kansas airfares. The House approved that plan as an amendment to the lottery bill, but the Senate never debated it.

Superintendent cancels Civil War re-enactment

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — The superintendent of the Buhler school district canceled a grade school re-enactment of a Civil War battle when he realized children would have wielded replicas of weapons.

The last-minute cancellation of this week's reenactment of the Battle of Fredericksburg by Prosperity Grade School fifth and sixth graders upset some parents. About 40 people showed up at a meeting Monday morning to talk to superintendent David Brax about his decision.

"I thought you worked for us," said Julie Kimmel, wife of school board candidate Tedd Kimmel. She said she and her husband were disappointed in the decision.

Online voting not yet at widespread acceptance

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Voting through the Internet from home or the workplace has not yet received widespread acceptance. But don't tell that to Arizona Democrats.

They're very pleased with the heavy participation and enthusiasm for their March primary that pioneered the use of Internet voting.

"It was extremely successful," said Cortland Coleman, executive director of the Arizona Democrats. "It went better than we thought it could have gone. There were no security breaches."

Arizona Democrats have had inquiries from as far away as Japan and from many U.S. county and municipal governments about their effort, he said.

Online elections close to flawless

■ Despite early worries voting on Internet goes well; results please SGA.

By CHARLIE MORASCH
Kansas State Collegian

Due to the recent earthquake in Seattle, the plans to have the Student Governing Association elections entirely online were in jeopardy, said Dustin Petrik, Student Senate elections chair.

"Validity Systems, the election vendor, is located in Seattle," Petrik said. "They gave us some pretty dramatic pictures showing that their building was really badly damaged."

Petrik said the company's office, computers and shells toppled into the center of the room in piles.

"The only reason we were lucky enough to still have an election is because their server that has their Web information, the voting site online, and all of K-State's voting information, was in a different location," he said. "Otherwise, we would have had to go to the back-up plan and had to have printed paper ballots."

Student Body President Jake

Worcester said he believes the online election went well.

"I think it went fantastic," Worcester said. "We were very, very impressed with the way that it worked. Validity Systems did an excellent job."

Petrik said one of the reasons Senate moved to the Internet election was because of the accuracy in electronic voting and the ease at which the votes were tallied.

"One of the things we joked about was that we wouldn't have any problems like there were in Florida in the United States presidential election," Petrik said. "It was really nice that once the election started, we could sit back and let the election vendor do the work and hope that there were no real problems up there."

Since the election was handled by Validity Systems, the Elections Committee only had to print out the results. Petrik said all write-in votes were to be checked for spelling and tabulated.

"We didn't touch a single paper ballot. Even write-in votes were online this year," Petrik said. "What we had was a 200-page printout, with one page for every single person who got a write-in vote, for every single spelling of their name. That is one of the things that we will have to go over the next couple of days."

Since Validity Systems is located in Seattle and handles many clients, SGA had to submit voter eligibility one month ahead of the election. Last year, SGA used a different voter service and submitted voter information three days before the election.

Petrik said students who changed their major within that month were required to vote in the college they were enrolled in at the time of the submittal. Petrik said although there was a problem with the early deadline for voter information, online voting seemed to work well and that Senate wanted it to continue, in part because K-State always has been on the cutting edge of online voting.

"We are going to recommend that it continue," Petrik said. "Right now, it's kind of a university phenomenon. Some universities, especially smaller ones, are doing their elections online. K-State was really one of the first in the nation to start doing this."

Petrik said he expects online voting to spread beyond college campuses.

"In the next couple of years, I really think that we're gonna see state and local elections, and maybe even national elections, possibly going online just to get rid of paper ballots," Petrik said.

Worcester said he agreed that there were minor problems, but the higher number of voters proved that online voting worked well.

"There were a few small problems," Worcester said. "But every time we asked a question, they had an answer for us. It was successful, as evidenced by the increase in voter turnout."

AFROTC to offer accelerated training

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

A new program will allow Air Force ROTC cadets to complete their training in less time.

Students now can finish the program in a year, instead of the two- or four-year programs offered.

"They can now accelerate to get it done," said Capt. Paul White, associate professor of aerospace studies.

Students who join the program will attend a summer camp to train and attend classes that normally are taught during their junior year.

"They will pick up with the students who are in the two and four-year programs," White said. "They will be caught up with the seniors."

The four-year program requires students to take a summer camp and one academic class in aerospace per semester. Students in the two-year program take one academic course in aerospace and a longer field training session during the summer between their junior and senior year.

"The one-year program will be beneficial for students who do not want to spend as much time in the program," White said.

Brad Caywood, senior in mechanical engineering, is at the end of his first year of the two-year program.

"The one-year program will be good for those who want to get through it quicker," he said.

Caywood said he has mixed feelings about which program to recommend.

"For me, it's a toss-up. After being in the program for a year, I am looking forward to next year," he said.

White said a shortage of officers for the fiscal year 2002 encouraged the formation of a one-year program.

"The Air Force is projecting a shortfall for the fiscal year of about 450 officers," White said. "We hope to offset the shortfall with the faster training of new officers."

White said students have shown no firm interest in the new program.

"We are still in the process of getting the word out," he said.

Members of the Air Force ROTC program will have a campus recruiting day Friday. There will be classroom visits, an information booth in the K-State Student Union and an open house to visit the Air Force ROTC offices.

"We hope to successfully recruit many students for our new program," White said. "We also want to let them know that their involvement in the program is a benefit in

LOST SOULS

Families, friends of Alheimers sufferers wait, hope for cure

The bed looked as though it could swallow her tiny frame and still be hungry. The room had a scent like that of a flea market, musty with merchandise that was no longer new. The walls were drab and lifeless.

And the lady I called great-grandma Bird didn't have a clue who anyone around her was.

I was 8 years old then, and seeing someone I loved like this scared the life out of me. Everyone around me kept talking about some disease, a disease that had been eating away at her mind like a mouse caught in a trap, alive just enough to still be reaching for the cheese that imprisoned it in the first place.

Her body looked like a prune, all shriveled up, like when I am in the bathtub for too long.

At the time I thought the disease was called "old timers." Even though I pronounced the name wrong, it was painful. It was painful because there was a realization that I wasn't remembered — she didn't remember my name or anyone else's.

And when she died a few months later, I cried for the woman who I would forever remember as being in a world of fog. A world where she was viewed as a physical prune by 8 year olds such as myself. I felt sorry for her because she had lived a life, but was to the point where she didn't remember any of it.

Now it is my grandmother's turn to be in the bed that could engulf her for a midnight snack, and she to can sometimes remember us and other times she will be searching for pieces that are missing.

I am 22 years old, and seeing someone I love in this condition is scaring the life out of me. And everyone around me keeps talking about this disease.

And now I know that the disease is called Alheimers.

According to the Scientific American Web site, 4 million Americans suffer from this condition. Experts estimate that by the year 2025, 22 million people worldwide will be affected by this disease.

The Yahoo health page states a variety of symptoms that accompany this. Symptoms such as intellectual decline, an inability to perform purposeful movements, wandering attention, confusion and memory losses which are primarily short term at first. Other symptoms include impaired judgment and sudden mood changes.

Regions of the brain lose neurons, which increases deterioration of the brain.

However, new discoveries in the past decade have helped to advance our understanding of Alheimers. A recent study shows that mental stimulation helps to delay the onset of the disease.

With celebrities such as former President Reagan battling this disease, it is gaining more attention.

But for now we will sit and wait, convincing people we are not strangers, but instead family — and hoping for a cure, trying not to be hurt when they don't understand you are trying to help, not hurt them by placing them in a nursing home.

We also hope for a change. Knowing, deep down, that it is too late for them.

All that is left is an aching, as more people take the walk down memory lane with very little to remember.

GTAs learn as well as instruct in classroom

Let's just call it "the great experiment."

Briefly — and justifiably so — I was privileged to be a graduate teaching assistant in English. Maybe that sounds sarcastic, and I can see how you might hear it that way. To start, the concept of being a GTA is sort of perverse — all gruntwork, minimal control over the class, it's like the worst of all worlds. And it can be.

Being a GTA in English is a few steps down from that wonderful start. You're paid enough to buy books for class and maybe heat your house or vehicle of residence. You get shunted off into Denison Hall with most of the English department and let's face it, if there were a College of Depression, it'd own Denison.

Inside, air stagnates, Jell-O whimpers, kittens howl — they've even caught squirrels smuggling dynamite into Denison. And when I was assigned an office, I shared it with 20-odd other GTAs in about the same amount of room taken up by a handicapped parking stall. No wonder interdepartmental romances bloom so quickly on this campus — squirming to your desk sometimes accidentally breaks out into foreplay. (Despite how that might sound — that's not always a good thing.)

So you're squeezed into your office in Denison — but you get to teach somewhere else on campus. Maybe you'll luck out and get a cool room in Bluemont Hall (two out of three — thank you, God). Maybe you'll get a room with the aesthetic sense of a condemned slaughterhouse and lit by flickering torches on damp stone walls (yes, you know the room, don't you?). Maybe you'll go running outside at every available opportunity, frostbite be damned.

In fairness, realize most of these gripes are born of the fact that the Department of English gets less money than Ryan Leaf's food taster — it's not that I didn't like the department (uhm, well, y'know, I'm showing unusual adherence to it). It's that it gets less attention and funding than the sundial and makes the best it can do with it.

The department made the most money way back in 1989 — the year it carved a slot into the wall of Denison and painted the building like a parking meter.

... And in addition to the classes you're taking, you've usually got two classes of 22 students, each writing an average (to my medicated recollection) of one paper every two weeks.

Sorry, but I'll never feel sorry for any amount of multiple-test grading when you're staring down 44 papers — each of which represents not merely academic aspiration, but students putting a significant amount of themselves on the line. Filling in ovals or cranking through formulas isn't as involving or as intimate as a personal composition, even when the paper's titled "Hubcaps: Our Silent Guardians" — words chosen for even menial tasks or trivial details still reflect ourselves, and we're protective of them, because in many ways, criticism of them is criticism of us.

It's even worse when the "personal experience" essay arrives. How do you grade an essay about some very meaningful, occasionally painful moments? You face the risk of telling a student "This paper isn't well-organized and has confusing construction" and then hearing "So your family and your bunny died and it's meaningless to me, so nyeh." You have to remind them "I'm grading the paper, not you" — you need to be a good communicator.

And pity the poor souls who drew me, Mr. Eloquent, the man who can't communicate without ingesting 40 ounces of coffee. I have to give my classes credit. Even at 9:30 a.m., they understood the difference between me waving and muttering "blurrgh" and me shaking my fist and mumbling "murrphee" while sipping coffee through a straw. Perceptive lot, them.

And that's what kept me from flinging myself under a UPS truck en route to class every morning. I didn't have "a class," a monolithic, faceless group of people. I had a collection of unique, fascinating personalities. And I was so much luckier than a calculus or physics GTA in that I got to know them — their insights, their expectations, their aspirations. I got so much from them — one wanted to write about foxes, one taught me that you could major in ceramics and all of them brought perspectives I'm still thankful for sharing.

That's what I'll take from "the great experiment."

I won't be a GTA again. Being an editor, designing, taking classes, having a real life — that's too much as it is, even without being a GTA (and trying to do all of those at once melted my brain down for a whole year). And the way I see it, being responsible for a classroom of students is something that deserves to be done completely and with full commitment — our students deserve no less. If I can't give that, I have no place at the front of the class.

So I remember those students — some I see once in a while about campus. Some I hear from intermittently (yes, lesse, there is no president on the $100 bill, guess who hadn't had coffee before writing his column?). Most I remember from time to time and I hope they're doing well, because no matter what the grade (if you think nothing hurts more than getting an "F," then you've never had to give one — Donna, sorry I put you through that), I'm still rootin' for them.

Maybe to some GTAs a class is just a sea of 9-digit ID numbers and seating charts. Tragic mindset to take into such an opportunity.

I looked through my teaching evaluations the other day — most had comments, many long, some flattering, relatively few threats. But the one which stopped me dead in my tracks had five simple words: "He knew who we were."

I tried — I hope I succeeded.

Scholarship to award part-time students

By SHANNON MARSHALL
Kansas State Collegian

An inspiration from the past has provided part-time and nontraditional K-State students with a new opportunity for financial aid.

In honor of its 90-year anniversary at K-State, the Social Club is sponsoring a $250 scholarship. To qualify for the award, a student must be enrolled in 11 credit hours or less and satisfy one of the following requirements: married, a parent, 25 years or older or a returning student.

Michaeline Chance-Reay, assistant professor in the College of Education and president of the K-State Social Club, said the scholarship was also founded in honor of the wives of each of the university's past presidents.

Chance-Reay wrote a book in 1999 about the presidents' wives titled "Land Grant Ladies: Kansas State University Presidential Wives."

"The club was founded in 1911 by President Henry Waters' wife, Margaret," Chance-Reay said. "The award honors all of the presidents' wives, from Mrs. Denison to Ruth Ann."

She said the award is unusual because there are not many of its kind available.

"There is very little amount of financial aid for part-time students, yet we have many part-time students at K-State," she said.

Nancy Bolsen, director of Adult Student Services and a member of the Social Club, said applications soon will be available in 101 Holton Hall and at various other locations around campus. The applications must be postmarked by April 15 and will be applied to the fall 2001 semester tuition. Bolsen said that in addition to receiving the scholarship money, recipients are given additional honors.

"It's a really nice thing," she said. "The recipient is invited to a luncheon and introduced to the club."

Chance-Reay said the scholarship is expected to be beneficial to a number of students.

"There is such a need here," she said.

"Part-time students need to have more scholarships available to them. There are more part-time students than ever before."

Bolsen said she is excited about the award and the effect it will have on part-time students.

Money for the award will be raised by the club's bake sale in front of Streetside Records in Aggieville on St. Patrick's Day.

"This is absolutely wonderful," Bolsen said.

"Recognizing K-State first ladies in this was a really positive attribute of the K-State Social Club. We're putting an emphasis on academics."

TOPEKA — Pharmaceutical companies are putting Kansans at risk with high prices for prescription medicines, a senator told colleagues.

Republican Sen. Jim Barnett, an Emporia physician, told the Senate Public Health and Welfare Committee on Wednesday how his patients have been affected.

"My patients are proud people," Barnett said. "They come in and their blood pressure isn't controlled. I have to drag it out of them. They're not taking their medicines. They can't afford to."

Barnett has sponsored a resolution asking Congress to take action to lower the costs of prescription medicines. He said he opposes price controls but said they might become the only option.

Barnett said companies can lower costs by cutting advertising and promotions.

Nancy Zogleman, a spokeswoman for drug maker Pfizer Inc., said such costs can get out of control. However, she said, prices are driven up by the costs of marketing a product, receiving patents and getting a drug approved by the federal government.

Zogleman said the way to keep prices under control is to reform Medicare, the federal program that funds medical services for the poor.

"It was developed four decades ago," she said. "Things have changed. Prescription drugs now keep people out of hospital. They keep people out of the nursing homes."

Zogleman said Pfizer agrees that federal action needs to be taken.

Barnett said he has begun prescribing medicine that can be obtained in Canada for about half the cost in the United States. That hurts local pharmacists, he said, but he has no choice.

Emporia pharmacist Don Hill told the committee he understands what patients are going through.

"Every day, I see patients who despair over cost of prescriptions," he said.

"I see patients who don't comply with their doctor's orders. I see the dire consequences of not complying with those orders."

Attorney attacks Navy investigation of submarine crash

By PAULINE ARRILLAGA
The Associated Press

PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii — Broken equipment, civilian guests and a rush to get back on schedule contributed to the fatal collision between a nuclear submarine and a Japanese fishing boat, a Navy admiral testified Wednesday.

A lawyer for the commander of the USS Greeneville, however, immediately questioned the admiral's findings and said the Navy's investigation of the Feb. 9 accident was incomplete and inaccurate.

"You had some time constraints placed on you that made it difficult to do a thorough and complete investigation," Cmdr. Scott Waddle's civilian attorney, Charles Gittins, said in questioning Rear Adm. Charles Griffiths, Jr.

Griffiths conducted the Navy's preliminary investigation. He spent his third day testifying in a Navy court of inquiry into why the Greenville hit and sank the Ehime Maru on Feb. 9, killing nine people. Gittins began his cross examination after the three admirals overseeing the court completed their questioning.

The court of inquiry will help determine the fate of Waddle, his second in command, Lt. Cmdr. Gerald Pfeifer, and the officer of the deck, Lt. j.g. Michael Coen. They could face courts-martial. The inquiry is expected to last several weeks.

"What went wrong?" asked Vice Adm. John Nathanman, who is overseeing the court.

Griffiths concluded that five main factors might have led to the collision:

—A rush to complete an emergency surfacing drill, which was pushed back nearly 45 minutes because of delays including a long lunch for the civilian guests.

—A lack of qualified sonar operators.

—Broken equipment that could have helped detect the Japanese ship.

—The number and location of 16 civilians aboard the Greenville.

—A command climate in which crew members were unaccustomed to questioning Waddle because they trusted his skills.

Griffiths has described a ship on which several enlisted personnel, from the skipper to a sonar analyst and an officer accompanying civilian guests, could have done more to ensure the safe operation of the sub.

However, Gittins told the court Waddle stressed safety, efficiency and backup in managing his crew. He asked Griffiths whether Waddle demonstrated a good deal of expertise in commanding his vessel and operating it.

"Certainly," Griffiths said.

"Do you have any reason to believe that Cmdr. Waddle did not use his best judgment?" Gittins asked.

"I have no reason to believe otherwise," the investigator said.

TURNOVER MARGIN	-3.5	-1.7

Quick facts

• K-State has an all-time record of 23-21 in conference tournaments (20-18 in Big Eight/3-4 in Big 12), and is 29-27 all-time at Kemper Arena.

• The Wildcats will be the 10th seed for the first time in Big 12 Tournament history. The purple are 4-2 all-time vs. the No. 7 seed and 2-2 in the first round of the Big 12 Tourney.

• K-State has won eight straight against Nebraska in Kansas City (18-3 all-time), while also posting a 6-0 mark vs. the Huskers in tournament action.

• The Cats are 2-3 in the past five games, while NU has dropped three of its last four contests.

Series history

Overall — K-State leads 112-86
During Big 12 era — series tied at 5-5
This season — Nebraska won both games: 63-61 in Manhattan (Jan. 30) and 82-56 in Lincoln (Feb. 4).

Last postseason meeting — K-State won, 47-45, in the first round of the 1993 Big 8 Tournament.

Missing a Friend

Nebraska center Kimani Friend, who averaged 14.1 points and 8.3 rebounds per game this season, will miss tonight's contest after suffering a sprained medial collateral ligament (MCL) in practice last Friday.

The Kingston, Jamaica, native posted 14 points and 9.3 boards per game against K-State in his four-year career, including a pair of double-doubles this season.

One GAME at a TIME

Cats prepare for tonight's matchup against NU

By DEREK BOSS

Kansas State Collegian

A win over Nebraska tonight won't nudge K-State toward an at-large NCAA Tournament bid.

Neither would a Friday second-round win over Kansas.

As the No. 10 seed in the 2001 Phillips 66 Big 12

Tournament, K-State (10-17, 4-12) must win all four games to claim the tourney championship and earn an automatic trip to the Big Dance.

But head coach Jim Wooldridge isn't worried.

In fact, he said his team's sole concentration is on tonight's matchup with the Cornhuskers — and on that game only.

"I just think our team is wanting to compete in game one," Wooldridge said. "We haven't talked about what we have to do to win the tournament. We just want to play well in game one and give ourselves a chance.

"I believe that every kid on our team should feel that way and does feel that way."

Besides, with K-State not on the bubble for a postseason appearance,

the Cats have nothing to lose in tonight's 6 p.m.

matchup with No. 7

seed Nebraska (14-15, 7-9), forward Matt Siebrandt said.

Or in the entire tournament, for that matter.

"Nobody expects us to go in there and win it, but that's to our benefit," Siebrandt said. "We can just go in there, relax, have fun and try to pull out a few ball games."

A few games against a team that swept K-State this season for the first time since 1994 — two contests Siebrandt said he wishes he could have back. After losing by a narrow 63-61 margin at home in late January, in which the Cats blew a lead in the closing minutes, the Huskers handed K-State a 82-56

shellacking in Lincoln just two weeks later.

"We didn't play well at Nebraska — it was probably our worst game of the year," Siebrandt said. "So we've got a little revenge factor in that case. And then they stole one from us at home that we should've won, so we've got a lot of motivation to come out and play hard against them."

However, the Huskers' Cookie Belcher might be riding on a little motivation of his own. The senior guard has averaged more than 23 points in his last three outings, including a career-high 29 against Kansas on Feb. 25.

"No one in recent games has been able to stop him," Wooldridge said. "Seven three point shots in versus Kansas says it all. We don't have anybody on our team as good a Cookie Belcher."

"He's playing like an NBA player right now. I think he's going to be a pro player somewhere."

Nevertheless, Cat guard Richie Terry isn't too worried about K-State's matchup with Belcher. The 6-foot-4 Husker may have collected 30 points, eight rebounds and 10 assists in the two previous games vs. K-State this season, but Terry said he's confident in his team's defense.

"We've just got to shut their post men down, because their guards aren't really that good," Terry said. "We should be able to contain Cookie Belcher and their shooting guard, No. 3 (Cary Cochran)."

"So if we contain their two guards and the post, then we should come out with a 'W.'"

K-State will attempt to contain a Nebraska frontcourt that will be without the services of senior center Kimani Friend, who suffered a sprained medial collateral ligament in last Friday's practice.

Yet, Friend's absence doesn't impact the outcome of the game, Terry said.

"It doesn't matter who plays, it just depends on what type of game we have. We need to come out and be aggressive on the offensive end — because defense is going to be there no matter what."

Guard's quickness, versatility helps K-State on defensive end

By DEREK BOSS

Kansas State Collegian

At 6 feet 3 inches and 220 pounds, Richie Terry might not possess a typical guard-like frame.

In fact, his level of quickness and versatility initially might be underestimated as he maneuvers on the defensive end of the floor.

But it seems to work.

"He doesn't look like he'd be a quick guard, and that might mess up a few people because they're not expecting that out of him," teammate Matt Siebrandt said, "but they see real quickly what he can do defensively."

For example — a team-leading 48 steals, ranked sixth in the Big 12 Conference and 10th on K-State's single-season charts. A career-high five against Nebraska on Feb. 14. A 1.78 theft-per-game average, collecting 25 in the past 10 games and two or more in his last eight outings.

"If we need the ball, I try to go get it," Terry said. "Most games, we'd be down and we had to come back with defense, so I just try to get the ball for my team the best I can."

The results seem to have impressed head coach Jim Wooldridge, who recruited Terry out of Jacksonville (Texas) Junior College.

"He has the best defensive ability on our team," Wooldridge said. "The more he learns and the more committed he becomes on that end of the floor, he could be an outstanding defender — a one-on-one defender, I believe that."

"He's got great feet. He's got great base, strength, great hands — he just needs to keep improving."

Terry, a native of Joliet, Ill., has started the last 22 games for K-State, averaging nearly 29 minutes per contest in conference play.

The sophomore transfer helped build a Wildcat defense that limited

Big 12 opponents to 39.7-percent shooting from the field, good for a No. 3 ranking in the league.

Meanwhile, K-State also was consistent in limiting its opponents' top scorer to under his season average, doing so in 19 of 25 games this year. Siebrandt won't deny Terry had much to do with that success, as he said the Cat guard has been the team's defensive stopper this season.

"He's just got good feet, and he's always in the right place at the right time," Siebrandt said. "He always plays hard on defense, and we can trust to put him on the other team's best player and shut him down."

"He's just a sparkplug for us defensively."

However, that aggressive defensive play doesn't go without an occasional foul. In fact, while Terry leads the Cats in steals, he also ranks first in foul outs with six.

"I fouled out a couple of games being aggressive," he said, "but I had fouls that I shouldn't have picked up, I thought."

Yet, although Wooldridge likes the guard's defensive pressure, Terry said the Cat coach often reminds him to use his head out there on the floor.

"Sometimes, when I pick up my second foul in the first half, he just tells me to be smart," Terry said, "and then, if I pick up my third, he'd probably be kind of mad. So he tells us to be smart about the third one."

Although Terry's concentration might reside on the defensive end of the floor, his offensive game has begun to flourish in the latter stages of the year, Siebrandt said.

"He always showed signs offensively, and lately he's been putting it all together and has been really valuable to us," he said.

Terry's 5.2 point-per-game average this season might not reflect that particular asset, but the sophomore has scored 26 points in the past three games, including the game-winning bucket with 40 seconds on the clock at Colorado.

He has hit 19-of-41 (.463) shots in his last six ball games in averaging 8.2 points, highlighted by a 6-of-8 performance and a career-high 16 points at Nebraska, while ranking second on the team in assists (64).

And if that wasn't enough, the guard also turned his three-point shooting around, connecting on four of his last nine attempts from downtown, compared to an 0-for-16 slump from beyond the arc to start conference play.

As Terry has begun to find his offensive rhythm, his mentality has changed along with it, he said.

"The midpoint of the season I wasn't really trying to take a lot of shots," Terry said, "but now I've got a goal that I want to take at least 10 shots a game and try to get to the foul line — try to do a little more scoring than just play defense."

Women's golf team members place in tournaments despite weather

By MICHAEL NOLL

Kansas State Collegian

K-State's women's golf team for the past two weeks has been an equal opportunity organization — every player had the chance to be No. 1.

Two weeks ago, sophomore Elise Carpentier won the Mountain View Classic in Tuscon, Ariz. On Tuesday, K-State went two-for-two, as freshman Christine Boucher placed first in the GTE Mo'Morial Tournament in Houston, Texas.

"It's pretty impressive. We were all surprised," Boucher said. "They were, like, joking about who was next, so it's kind of fun."

Kidding around comes easy after shooting the best individual score in K-State history, as Boucher did with her mark of 218 over 54 holes.

Perhaps more important, she improved throughout the entire tournament.

Boucher shot a first-round 76 on Monday, but followed with rounds of 72 and 70.

"She's just a good player and she played well this week — hit a lot of good shots and made some putts," head coach Kristi Knight said. "She's got a good frame of mind. She always has a good attitude about the game of golf and about her game, and it was her week."

As glowing a report as Knight gives, Boucher could have hit better.

"I didn't really hit the ball well," Boucher said. "My birdie putts fell. That's the reason why I played really well. The golf course was nice, and I had good putts, so I think the key was there. I had my fewest putts in the entire tournament."

While it was Boucher who put on the putting exhibition this time, the last tournament's champion, Carpentier, didn't fare near as well. She shot three rounds over 80 to finish in a tie for 78th. However, that inconsistency isn't necessarily cause for worry, Knight said.

"That's golf. A week ago, Elise felt like she was hitting the ball well, and she was making some putts. This week, on a difficult golf course, she didn't hit the ball quite as well and didn't score as well," she said. "It wasn't her tournament, but Elise works hard and has a good attitude, and she'll bounce back."

The rest of the Cat squad fell somewhere between first and 78th. Miranda Smith tied for 43rd, the next highest placing for K-State, and Carrie Chambers tied for 48th. Behind those scores, K-State finished ninth out of 17 teams, its highest ever placing at that tournament, but the golfers still were disappointed.

"We were disappointed the first day — 319, 318 — that was our highest day one total so far this year, but I was proud of them. They came back Tuesday," Knight said.

"We had a 306 team total and beat Missouri, beat KU and beat Texas Tech, which is important to do that."

"From a team standpoint, it could have been better. You obviously want more people to step up. It would be great if we could hit on the same day. We haven't had that yet, but I know they can. We've got the potential to be a really good team."

Becoming a great team will be made easier when the dismal Manhattan weather improves. Due to snow and freezing temperatures, the Cats have spent most of their practice time in the Brandeberry Indoor Complex, which just isn't the same as Colbert Hills.

"There's a big difference between hitting shots and playing," Knight said. "They haven't even been able to walk 9 holes out at Colbert Hills because of the snow. So I think that makes what Christine did even more impressive is the fact that other than two rounds at Tuscon, that's all that any of these players have really played for the last close to a month."

Fortunately for the Cats, though, they will have almost three weeks before their next tournament — time that hopefully can be spent outside.

"Hopefully, we'll get some good weather, and we'll get out on Colbert Hills and they can play," Knight said, "and get some confidence from finding themselves in situations, facing certain shots and hitting those shots — the things that you can't really take from practicing inside."

AGGIEVILLE STYLE

From vintage to new age, local businesses offer unique finds

By BETSY STYERAK
Kansas State Collegian

Funky-styled dresses, fashionable corduroys and culture-oriented clothes are just a few of the diverse clothing styles found in Aggieville.

Clothing stores with different personalities are what give Aggieville its originality, said Amber Byrd, sales associate at Krystallos and junior in apparel marketing and design. Krystallos is one store that has the different styles people want, she said.

"These clothes give somebody a chance to make an appearance and stand out," Byrd said. Knee-length skirts and lightweight tops dominate spring sales, she said. Krystallos carries only clothing for women as well as an array of jewelry.

"It fits more to the college lifestyle than everyday clothing," Byrd said. "It is tailored to the college student with lots of detailed and beaded looks."

Since Krystallos carries only a few of each garment, customers are more likely to purchase an original ensemble. This sets Krystallos, as well as other Aggieville shops, apart from main chains, Byrd said.

"We don't have 500 of the same shirts," she said. "We don't carry large quantities of items." Byrd said that through each season, the clothing changes mildly, but the style remains fun all year long.

"Our store is a place to come and get clothing where you can find to fit any occasion at any time," she said.

Deja Vu is a vintage clothing shop with many wild clothes, owner Andrea Birdsall said. Everything from crazy colored boas to stylish old school winter coats can be found on the racks.

"This store has clothing from different decades," she said. "A lot of this stuff is one of a kind."

Deja Vu's style is unique in a different way from other Aggieville shops with the 1940s to the 1970s style. Birdsall said many of the styles have been recycled from the past decades.

"Fashion repeats itself," she said. "That is why the vintage style is still so popular."

Birdsall said she opened Deja Vu over a year ago and is thinking about carrying some retail clothing in addition to the vintage styles. The retail clothing she plans to carry will be different from styles normally found in retail outlets, Birdsall said.

"I want to carry new items," she said. "I still plan on selling vintage clothing, but I want to sell half vintage and half new."

Birdsall said she said this change will increase business for the store.

"A lot of people aren't aware of clothing stores in Aggieville," she said. "It is really hard for a retail business to be successful here because there is not much activity during the day."

Ethnique Boutique brings the cultural side of fashion to Aggieville, Pauline Okot-Kotber, owner of the store, said.

"It is important that people see the different styles from different countries," she said.

For almost four years, she has been selling African clothing and collectables, she said. The clothing is lightweight and often embroidered with traditional African designs. Head wraps, skirts and dresses from the shop have a distinct African style, Okot-Kotber said.

"Some of the clothing comes from Uganda, West Africa and Kenya," she said.

Being a unique shop in Aggieville, Okot-Kotber said she doesn't feel threatened by other retail shops.

"My things are different, if you want different, you come here," she said.

Ethnique Boutique is also known for its hair braiding services. Okot-Kotber braids hair and also offers extensions of various textures and colors. The braiding services can take hours, she said, depending on how thin the braids are.

Another independently owned shop that is well-known in Aggieville is Patricia's Undercover. Many rely on Patricia's style and fashion for sexy lingerie and swim suits, shop owner Patricia Yeager said.

"I try to find an unusual design, with a style that is more modest," she said.

Yeager, who has owned Patricia's for 15 years, said that the fashions available fit what the customers want.

"We appeal to a wider age range and a broader size range," she said.

Patricia's Undercover carries petite to 3X sizes of everything from bikinis to teddies, Yeager said.

"The two most important things when serving a customer is to find her a good fit and to make her feel comfortable, sexy and beautiful," she said. "That is what makes this store special and unique."

Karimi, Amos fail to make it to runoff

By ERIN DEHN

Kansas State Collegian

Tucked away in the corner of Safari Jack's Watering Hole, Ali Karimi, student body presidential candidate, and his running mate, Fidel Amos, enjoyed dinner Wednesday night while waiting for election results.

Amos, sophomore in public relations, said he was feeling calm and unusually collected. Karimi said he was glad to have the campaign come to a close.

"I just want to get it over with," said Karimi, junior in television and radio. "I've gotten some e-mails about how we should worry about environmental issues instead of toilet paper — and they're from teachers."

Amos said he had doubts of a victory because the pair didn't spend money for their campaign.

"I would love to win just to show that fact," Amos said.

Karimi said he would be happy with receiving 300 votes because that would show people care, but results later showed that Karimi and Amos received 238 votes, 6 percent of the 3,740 votes.

If there were any preannouncement jitters, Karimi and Amos hid them well.

"I'm not nervous now, but I'll be nervous as can be if we win," Amos said.

As the hour approached, the volume of the radio was turned down and the televisions were tuned to channel 8. Eyes throughout the building were focusing not on beer and fries, but on election coverage.

The first news of the evening for Karimi was his victory in the College of Arts and Sciences Senate.

"Obviously, I struck a chord," Karimi said. "I'm really going to push for campaign finance reform."

The atmosphere was relaxed while the wait continued. Then the Hopper, Engel enjoy election run despite 3rd-place finish

By COLLEEN FOOTE

Kansas State Collegian

Win or lose, Ben Hopper and Eric Engel said they felt they made a statement with their campaign.

Before the election results were announced, Hopper, student body presidential candidate and senior in agricultural communications, said he felt he and Engel, vice presidential candidate and senior in electronic engineering, had a good chance at becoming the next student body president and vice president.

"I think it is going to come down to three groups: us, Lenkner/Bosco and Barker/Kauffman," Hopper said. "We all represent a different and a wide variety of the campus population."

Hopper said he felt most of their supporters came from the College of Agriculture, the K-State Marching Band and the College of Engineering.

The candidates celebrated and waited for the election results at Bobby's Bar & Deli. They were joined by family and friends who wore bright orange Hopper and Engel T-shirts.

Their campaign announcement, which included some representatives from the marching band, made their campaign stand out from the start, Engel said.

"It was unique, theatrical and fun," said Hopper, a former marching band member. "It definitely drew attention to our campaign."

The candidates decided not to do any chalking because many students find it annoying, Hopper said.

"We've had fun," he said. "We've met a lot of people, different organizations and we've learned more about ourselves."

Getting the chance to meet more people and develop public speaking skills was one of the benefits of running for vice president, Engel said.

"I've never been a public speaker, and this enabled me to become noticed and involved," he said.

Before the results were announced, Hopper said he expected a runoff, but the concluding results were not what he had hoped for. Both candidates remained positive after the announcement, and they thanked friends and family for supporting them.

"We've had a lot of fun, and it was a thrill to run," Hopper said.

Greg and Janet Hopper, parents of the presidential candidate, said they were proud of the work their son and Engel did in the short amount of time they had.

"We are very happy and proud with both of them," Janet Hopper said. "They did wonderful. Ben has always been such a go-getter."

Hopper also urged the crowd to vote for Barker and Kauffman in the run-off election.

"Throughout the time I've known them, Kyle and Brandon have had a real passion for K-State," he said. "They have a lot of drive and ambition and can do a great job as president and vice president."

Hopper said he would like to help Barker and Kauffman with their campaign before the run-off election.

"It will be an interesting race to watch," he said.

Engel said even though they lost the election, it was worth the time and effort they put into it.

"It went well, and we worked hard," Engel said. "We had a lot of support, but I guess it came down to the candidates who had more support."

The candidates said they wished they would have had more time to devote to their campaign.

"With Eric taking 18 credit hours and me working two jobs, it made it difficult to work in the time," Hopper said. "We did what we did, and we had a good time doing it."

Wooten, Shea receive 7 percent of votes

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON

Kansas State Collegian

For student body presidential candidate Rick Wooten and vice-presidential candidate Aaron Shea, the mood Wednesday night was optimistic as they waited for the election results with a view all their own.

"We're predicting at least 5,000 votes," Wooten said.

"And that's just for us," Shea said.

"Each," Wooten added. In a dark corner of Scoreboard, they and about half a dozen supporters were determined to have a good time regardless of the outcome. No nervous twitches or shaking hands were observed. Wooten, senior in radio and television, and Shea, senior in secondary education, were devoting more attention to whether the jukebox was playing a song by The Eagles.

For two men running a third time for the same offices, stress just didn't seem to be much of a factor. Campaigning and losing in the 1999 and 2000 elections, Wooten said, has given them a lot of recognition and a chance to present issues.

Tom Rohr, a former K-State student and friend, said he came down to hang out with the pair.

"It'd be nice to see them win. It's always nice to win," he said. "But if they brought up issues that come up later, they did their job."

As it turned out, they didn't win. Taking a break from "Who Wants to Be a Millionaire?" on the bar television, the party tuned into election results. Boos resounded as the runoff between Travis Lenkner/Mary Bosco and Kyle Barker/Brandon Kauffman were announced. Wooten and Shea came in with 275 votes, 7 percent of the total.

The pair made their plan clear earlier if a runoff occurred without them.

"We'll support anybody — not

Salina SGA results tabulated

By JENNIFER O'NEILL
Kansas State Collegian

K-State-Salina was sitting on the edge Wednesday night, awaiting the results for the Student Governing Association elections.

Students voted in Mike Higley, sophomore in computer science and technology management, as student body president; Nick Sulzen, sophomore in computer information systems, as student body vice president; and Bryan Hinnen, freshman in arts, science and business, for Student Senate chair.

Higley and his team received 139 out of 168 votes.

Higley said the trio is very excited and ready to get to work. Upon taking office March 27, Higley said his first order of business will be to start on cabinet selection. This is the first year the president and vice president are able to choose their cabinet.

"Our slogan was 'Building it with Pride,' and we were going after increased communication between SGA and the student body, student involvement and basically giving students what they want," he said.

Higley said a big item under the communication aspect of their campaign is standardized e-mail.

"We think it's important for people to know how to get a hold of e-mail addresses for the students who choose not to use K-State WebMail," he said. "Those who don't use the university's WebMail still need to be kept in touch with for important things."

He said a standardized e-mail system would create a place for those e-mail addresses to be posted.

Higley said another topic on the communication agenda is looking into starting a radio station on campus. He said he also would like to see bulletin boards posted in each classroom keeping students up-to-date with issues in SGA.

As for the trio's other running issues, Hinnen said they will work hard on trying to increase student involvement in SGA by having a full Senate for the first time.

"One of our biggest problems on this campus is lack of communication," he said. "I think that it's because we've never had a full Senate in the past, and I'm really pushing for it this year."

The campus elected 16 senators this year.

Hinnen said other ways they plan to get student involvement to increase is by stressing the intern program within SGA, as well as having what he referred to as "Just Ask It."

"These would be student inquiry sessions where we find out what it is they want and what we can do to help them," he said.

The last part of the group's platform is giving students what they want.

"We're really looking into a child care system because we have a large amount of non-traditional students," Sulzen said.

"People have expressed a need for some sort of a system."

Sulzen said they can't promise anything this year, but the issue definitely will be addressed to see if it's feasible.

Other issues that come into play for giving students what they want are advising and extending campus hours.

"We really would like to try for more labs and buildings to be open on a 24-hour basis," he said.

K-State-Salina used the online voting system this year, and Kevin Gorman, Elections Committee chair for K-State-Salina, said they ran into virtually no problems or complaints from voters.

"At this point, I feel pretty good and excited about this year," Sulzen said. "It's going to be a good year, and I know we have a lot of anxious senators."

days leading to the runoff and is hopeful that large numbers will cast ballots in the runoff, as they did in the general election.

He said 19.52 percent of students voted, compared to the 18.87 percent that voted in the 2000-2001 election.

"It sounds low, but it is the highest it has been in several years," he said. "Our goal was to pass last year's numbers, and we did, so we are excited about that. I just hope it continues to Tuesday."

Petrik said the results won't be official until Senate approves them March 29, which also is when the winners of the run-off election will take office. Until then, Petrik said election results constantly will be updated on the official Web site.

"We had a lot of write-in candidates for college councils, graduate school and veterinarian medicine that we have to go through," he said. "Those unofficial results should be posted by Friday on the Web site."

In general, Petrik said he is pleased with the results of the election.

"It was well fought between the candidates," he said. "They all had good issues, and we had great voter turnout."

However, Petrik said some possible violations did cause some problems. Rick Wooten, a presidential candidate, did have two complaints filed against him from individuals on the Collegian staff, he said, that are being investigated.

"We do know that the complaints didn't violate any direct elections policy," he said, "but we were investigating the complaints because they possibly violated other university policies."

Under the election guidelines, any violation of university policies can result in removal from the presidential race. However, Petrik said the investigations will cease because of Wooten's election results.

"There is no point in pursuing it from our level," he said. "He is no longer a candidate."

Wooten and his running mate, Aaron Shea, received 275 votes, or 7.35 percent of the total votes.

marketing, said. "It takes such a large margin to win the whole vote. We couldn't be prouder."

Lenkner said their campaigning work is far from over. He said their mission in the next few days is to get as many students back to the polls as possible.

"We have to convince students to go vote again. We need our supporters to get to the polls on Tuesday so we can hang on to our margin."

Bosco said they have a good base of supporters who realize they are needed for the ticket to win the runoff. She said they will spend the next few days educating people about the run-off election and when it is.

Tuesday's run-off election is a new start for the candidates, Lenkner said.

"It's a whole new election and the dynamics change," Lenkner said. "It's really a different mindset for voters when there are five candidates and when there are only two. We have to energize our supporters and reach more people."

Lenkner and Bosco were surrounded with several supporters as they waited for results.

Supporters were as aware of the importance of the next week as the candidates themselves.

"These last days will matter the most. They have to keep all of their support and get every last person behind them," Seitz said.

Bosco said their diversity is what will help them the most. She said their differences of knowledge, experiences and backgrounds allowed them to gain support from many groups.

"This is the most balanced ticket in the election," Lenkner said.

to see them come this far. Now we've really got our work cut out for us. We can get our head above water for a day, but then we've got to get back to work."

One student said she supported Barker/Kauffman because of their fresh views.

"Personally, I think it's nice to see fresh new faces," Nichole Kent, senior in public relations, said. "They kind of break the mold of what's been in there before."

Barker said he and Kauffman have enjoyed their time spent campaigning.

"It really went well," he said. "We got out to see so many students and learn so much about issues on campus. It feels good to have people tell you their concerns."

Kauffman said overall, his and Barker's experience has been positive.

"It's a lot of fun. I've been looking forward to today," he said. "Now I'm excited for Tuesday."

The candidates now have six days to campaign until they will face Lenkner/Bosco in the runoff election. Barker said he encourages Barker/Kauffman supporters to meet at 11 a.m. Sunday to chalk campus sidewalks. He said he thanks the students for their support.

"We're really happy these people have been behind us the whole time," he said. "It's great that the students at K-State want to give us a chance."

KARIMI/AMOS

results were aired.

There was no victory dance for Karimi and Amos.

"Even though we didn't win today," Karimi said, "Viva la Resistencia lives on."

Karimi said he was satisfied with the election results.

"I'm kind of glad it's over. Either way, I got involved and didn't spend any money," Karimi said.

Karimi and Amos said they will support Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman in the runoff against Travis Lenkner and Mary Bosco.

"Barker/Kauffman all the way," Amos said. "Travis Lenkner's issues — they won't affect me at all. Kyle's ideas make sense."

One issue Karimi said he would like to have the new president take into consideration is utilizing the two university TV stations.

"If we don't see a vast significant change, we might run again," Karimi said.

Amos said he agreed. "There's a good chance I might, depending on how many issues are resolved by whoever wins," he said.

Despite the loss, Karimi and Amos said they have no regrets about their campaign; however, if they could go back, they would have made T-shirts.

Karimi said he was pleased to have Amos as a campaign partner.

"Fidel was awesome," he said. "He had a lot of good ideas, and he's very people-oriented."

After the food was gone and the anticipated announcement was over, Karimi and Amos laughed and joked about the past couple of weeks.

Karimi summed up his overall feeling about their campaign.

"What makes a multitude of people a society — rather than a crowd — are commonly held ideas," Karimi said.

Lenkner/Bosco," Shea said.

Though the Wooten/Shea campaign touched on housing and transportation issues, most of its recent publicity has been on charges against Wooten. One stemmed from a collection of Dec. 10 charges of driving under the influence, refusing to take a breath test and unsafe turning, to which he has pleaded not guilty.

Another was from a Feb. 19 charge of serving alcohol to a minor at the Aggie Lounge, where he is a bartender. Wooten had just attended the Tuesday arraignment for the that charge and said he pleaded not guilty. Trials for each set of charges are scheduled for March and April, respectively.

More unique charges against Wooten involved a Collegian complaint against him for entering Collegian files Sunday, then Monday, and printing off articles on himself before they were published. Though Wooten was a columnist for the paper last fall, he no longer had access. He violated the newsroom policy, being a candidate for office. Although a complaint has been filed, the extent of possible charges is unclear.

Wooten said he obtained the story, but he didn't change it. He said he wanted to see the story early because his mother reads the paper online.

"If my mom's going to call me up, I need to know what's on there," he said.

Wooten said coverage is the Collegian's right, but he said he disagrees with putting the stories on the front page, along with stories on recent school shootings.

"I printed something off before the Collegian wanted me to and they put me next to a friggin' child murderer," he said.

In the end, Wooten said they didn't have many regrets over the course of the campaign. Having spent nothing for the entire run this year, Wooten said donations would have helped.

"We didn't get enough to donate to charity," he said. "She's a good girl. I know her."

Retired teachers might ease budget woes

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

Michael Holen, dean of the College of Education, said he is proud of his college, but he is concerned about its future and the effects possible budget cuts could have on it. "It is demonstrable that we are one of the premier teaching programs in the U.S.," he said.

He said the college had a couple of job openings that needed to be filled and a couple of offers out, but as a result of the budget cuts, it is likely those positions will not be filled. A universitywide hiring freeze cannot allow it.

Holen said what likely will happen is that temporary professors will be brought in to help teach classes. Holen said the state of Kansas' 85-point program, which allows teachers to retire early, would be able to supply K-State with some quality teachers.

"We have access to some very experienced teachers who are recently retired," he said. "They are very high quality and well experienced."

Holen said his college has this luxury over other colleges. Not all colleges have an abundance of retirees interested in part-time jobs, he said.

The teachers brought in probably would not have to deal with issues of advising, and would not have to adhere to the research standards of a normal faculty. It is a solution that works, Holen said, in the short term.

"That is not good in the long haul, but in the short haul, it means you can meet the students' needs without affecting the quality," Holen said.

Holen said the college is nationally and locally accredited with having the largest teaching department in the state of Kansas. It goes through the accreditation process every five years, and he said a semester or two with higher temporary and part-time faculty would not affect that accreditation.

"Some people try to run a program like that, and that is a bad way to run a program," he said. "You lose your commitment to long-term development, and you lose perspective."

Holen said the budget cuts also would likely affect the outreach programs offered through graduate programs. Those programs would face more difficulty than would undergraduate programs.

"Any specific portion of elementary education that we would cut, students would just shift to another program, and we wouldn't save any money," he said. "We would still need to have advisers and classes and sections and supervise them in clinical. We have a direct obligation. We wouldn't look at those type of programs—that would be desperation. The state would have to do a lot worse things to us than we anticipate."

Holen said the cuts would cause them to offer fewer sections, which would make

Elements of Taste to close its doors

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

After only one year in business, Elements of Taste in Aggieville will close its doors March 17.

The restaurant is owned by Sherry Irsik, her husband, Kevin and their daughter, Jennifer. The decision to close came after Sherry Irsik had a heart attack over winter break.

"Heart problems run genetically in my family, and added stress will not help the situation," she said. "My doctor told me to cut back on the stress."

Sherry said the business has been successful. It has received some offers for the building, but the Irsiks said they prefer a buyer that will provide an Aggieville-like atmosphere.

"We want to keep the nightlife atmosphere in this part of Aggieville," Sherry said. "Any offers made from people that do not want to keep that are not negotiable. I cannot imagine this corner being dark. It would be a sin."

The Irsiks said they felt spring break was the perfect time to close.

"It is almost the end of the school year," Jennifer said.

On March 16 and 17, everything in the restaurant will be sold at half price.

"We hope students will stick around for the last night," Sherry said.

The last night will feature an 18-and-over show with two bands, Bearded Assholes and the Ego Maniacs.

The Irsiks said they have had great experiences with booking bands for shows.

"They love our atmosphere, and they like the fact that it's not so dark like other places — and that they can be close to the audience," Sherry said.

Sherry said they want to thank the community for their support. She said the Aggieville Business Association has been helpful.

"Aggieville has been good to us, and we have also met lots of nice people," she said. "They offered us help and made us a part of them. It has been like a family."

Sherry and Jennifer said it will be hard to say goodbye to their staff.

"We have retained 85 percent of our staff since opening," Sherry said. "They have become like a family, and we are really going to miss them. We could not have asked for a better one. I literally plucked them off the street."

The Irsiks also have invested a great amount of money into restoring the building.

"We have done so much work, and it cost us a lot of money to get it looking this good," Sherry said.

She said they are excited that Elements of Taste is an established business in Manhattan.

"We have our regulars," she said. "They will be sad to hear the news. We want the new owners to carry that on."

Sherry said if it were not for her health, they would stay in business.

"It is going to be really hard for us to close, but it has been a great learning experience," she said.

Student navigates campus in wheelchair

By NICK BRATKOVIC
Kansas State Collegian

One snowy day last week when the parking lots were a mess and the sidewalks weren't plowed, Michayla Fink was just trying to get to her job at the Women's Resource Center.

Fink, junior in political science and women's studies, has a situation much different than the K-State students who simply walk through the powdery snow — Fink navigates the snow in a wheelchair.

She had to call Disabled Student Services and have them plow a path through the snow on a sidewalk leading to Holton Hall, where she works on the second floor.

"I think 'hat damn parking lot,'" she said after arriving at work.

These snow days are the exception, Fink said. She rarely lets her disability get in the way, whether it is running errands for her job at the center or dealing with her classload this semester.

"It will probably take me five years to graduate," she said.

Fink said Disabled Student Services has played a positive role in her academic career at K-State.

Gretchen Holden, director of Disabled Student Services, said the program works to provide handicapped students the support they need for success at K-State.

Melissa Sidebottom, junior in social work and family studies, was born with spastic cerebral palsy and has worked a variety of jobs at K-State. She said that in her jobs, she simply has had to work around her disabilities.

"I have been pretty pleased here at K-State," she said. "If I had a problem, I was able to go and talk to someone about what to do about it."

Holden said the department works to provide textbooks or other supplies to the estimated 600 students with disabilities for students like Fink, who was left paralyzed after she was in a car accident when she was 14 years old and has been in a wheelchair ever since.

It was an accident that forced her to miss a few months of school in Ulyssess, Kan., but Fink said she was able to come to grips with her paralysis in the time away from school. Now that Fink is 21, she said she has been able to put the experience behind her.

"It happened that year in October, and I got back to school in Ulyssess, and it was all behind me," she said.

Fink simply goes about her business, something she said is not hindered by the fact she's paralyzed.

"I don't really even think about," she said. "I kind of forget about it."

Tax-cut bill passes in House despite opposition from Democrats

By DAVID ESPO
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Republican-controlled House voted Thursday for an across-the-board tax cut of nearly $1 trillion over the next decade, handing President George W. Bush a victory only 48 days into his term.

The vote was 230-198 in favor of the reductions at the heart of the president's economic program and came over the objections of Democrats who said the cut was too big and aimed at upper-income taxpayers.

Approval of Bush's plan sent the bill to an uncertain fate in the Senate, where a pivotal bipartisan group of lawmakers has expressed concern about the $958 billion price tag.

"Who among us can say that the economy doesn't need a little encouragement?" said Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., as the House debated the first priority piece of legislation of the new president. In addition, he said, cutting taxes will give consumers more money to pay off credit card bills. It will give families more money to pay off high energy bills. It will give parents more money to pay for education expenses.

House Democratic Leader Dick Gephardt of Missouri countered that the plan was so big it would complicate efforts to pay down the national debt and make it more difficult to safeguard programs such as Medicare and Social Security. Underscoring Democratic complaints the GOP was favoring upper-income taxpayers, he added, "If we're going to deliver tax relief, let's deliver it to people who need it."

The legislation would gradually reduce and condense the current five graduated income tax rates of 15 percent, 28 percent, 31 percent, 36 percent and 39.6 percent. By 2006, rates would be pegged at 10 percent, 15 percent, 25 percent and 33 percent.

To provide relief immediately, the measure also would create an interim 12 percent bracket, retroactive to Jan. 1, 2001, applied to the first $12,000 of taxable income for couples and $6,000 of taxable income for individuals.

House legislators block motion to extend lottery

TOPEKA — Another attempt to send Gov. Bill Graves a bill extending the Kansas Lottery's life failed Thursday in the House. The latest effort came from a legislator who had been trying to stall the bill's progress.

The House voted 63-60 Wednesday to reject a compromise drafted by a committee of three senators and three House members. Frustrated negotiators later returned the same proposal to both chambers.

Critics of the bill, led by Rep. Carlos Mayans, said the Wednesday vote had more to do with wounded pride than policy. Mayans, R-Wichita, wanted to send a message to senators that they needed to respect the House's ideas.

Mayans and others opposed the bill because it lacked a House-backed provision to use $4 million in lottery revenues to subsidize airfares in Kansas. The House, at Mayans' urging, had added that plan to the lottery bill as an amendment, but the Senate didn't even debate the idea.

On Thursday, Mayans asked his colleagues to reconsider Wednesday's rejection of the bill. He said he expects the legislation, without his airfare plan, to win legislative approval.

"I was just trying to shorten the process," Mayans said later. "It's time to move on."

But Mayans was forced to withdraw his motion when colleagues questioned whether the House even had possession of the bill. The Senate already had accepted the House's rejection Wednesday and reappointed its conference committee members.

"I'm not sure it's here any more for us to reconsider," said Rep. Tom Klein, D-Wichita.

Had the House approved the compromise Wednesday, the bill would have gone to Graves. The Senate had approved it, 31-9.

The measure would keep the lottery in operation until July 1, 2008.

Other provisions would ban unsolicited lottery advertising by phone or e-mail, prevent the lottery from operating interactive video terminals, and require a security audit of the agency at least once every three years.

Students arrested for bringing arms to school

WICHITA — Two Northeast Magnet School students were arrested after one brought an unloaded semiautomatic handgun to school and the other brought a knife.

No threats were made and students and staff were never in danger, said safety director Galen Davis.

Both students were sophomores. The incident Wednesday marks the fourth time this year that a student has brought a gun into Wichita schools.

A student noticed the gun and told a teacher, who in turn notified school administrators. The school was locked down while police and school officials searched for the gun. It was found 90 minutes later.

Davis said he doesn't know why the student brought the gun to school or where he got it.

Principal Jim McNiece said the student with the gun was not a "threatening kid," and during an interview was concerned he had scared his classmates.

Governorship remains option for action hero

LOS ANGELES — Is muscle-bound Hollywood action hero Arnold Schwarzenegger going to run for governor of California?

A day after saying Schwarzenegger wouldn't try next year for the office held by Democratic Gov. Gray Davis, publicist Jill Eisenstadt said Wednesday her client is undecided and Schwarzenegger will decide in the next couple of months.

On Tuesday, Eisenstadt said the "timing's not right" for the action star, explaining that Schwarzenegger had family and film obligations preventing him from running for public office next year.

The star of the "Terminator" films and "Predator," among others, whet the appetites of fellow Republicans dreaming of an actor-to-governor sequel when he told a Los Angeles Times columnist a month ago that the governor's job was appealing.

After all, Republican Ronald Reagan had gone from Hollywood to Sacramento to the White House.

"I've thought about it many times because I love politics," Schwarzenegger said then. "I get such great satisfaction out of helping people."

Union celebrates anniversary

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

The day the K-State Student Union opened its doors 45 years ago was remembered Thursday afternoon.

Thursday's celebration, which included a trio quartet and birthday cake in the Union Courtyard, was much different than the opening day of the Union on March 8, 1956.

That day now can be seen in black and white photographs on display in the Union.

One photo shows the crowd of people on opening night, packed in a line that extended from the front entrance to the street.

The K-State Marching Band led the line of people into the Union, said Cindie Snyder, Union marketing and promotions manager.

"The students and public were not allowed in the Union during construction," Snyder said, "so it was pretty special when everyone was able to come in."

During the past 45 years, the Union has tried to have a celebration every five years, Snyder said.

She said she was glad the graduation fair also was going on in the Courtyard during the festivities.

"This is just a good time of the year to have an excuse to get together and celebrate," she said.

Union Program Council took part in the anniversary by supplying six cakes and refreshments.

It was the first time UPC participated in the birthday activities, Gina Kimble, UPC program adviser, said.

"We just wanted to celebrate our service to the Union," Kimble said.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said celebrating the Union's 45th anniversary just after the completion of the renovations is a nice tie-in.

"A lot of things have been done that we wanted to accomplish," Connaughton said.

"This is a time where there's a lot to reflect on. That includes things that are immediate, in the past and those that add to the future."

SGA allocates funds for Union utilities

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Student Senate passed a bill that would make a one-time allocation of $85,000 to the K-State Student Union to meet the inflating rates of energy cost.

"This was an unforeseen cost," Privilege Fee Chair Ryan Walker said. "The Union was hit by the utility hike, and there is no way they could've budgeted for it at the beginning of the year."

Revenue now funds 90 percent of the Union, and the other 10 percent is from student fees.

"They are lacking in the revenue area right now," Walker said.

A large part of the decrease in revenue is from the renovation construction, Student Body President Jake Worcester said.

"We lost a lot of customers during the renovation because it was easier for them to go somewhere else and avoid the construction," he said. "It will just take time to get those customers back in their normal routine. Hopefully, it is within the next year or two."

To combat the rising cost of energy, the Union has reduced its hours on various businesses in its facility. Among the most significant cutbacks are the closing of the K-State Union Bookstore on Sundays and the reduction of hours for the Copy Center, the Cats' Den and the Union Food Court.

"They are trying to make the changes," Walker said. "They just aren't helping enough right now, so they need the additional funding."

Worcester said being a not-for-profit business also hurts the Union in terms of revenue.

"They are not on an even playing field with their competitors," he said. "They are restricted by law from doing things like advertising, specials or cutting deals with organizations. It makes it hard for them."

Coming to Senate for emergency funding was a last resort for Union officials, Worcester said.

"They have looked everywhere else," he said. "Union Director Bernard Pitts is looking for every answer he can to the problem, and they aren't coming to him."

Senate also passed a resolution supporting implementation of advising responsibilities. Under the resolution, student and adviser responsibilities are outlined in order to establish common criteria in all colleges and departments in which to evaluate advisers.

"There is currently no policy in place that holds advisers responsible," Worcester said. "This is the first step in establishing a policy."

TAX CUTS

Officials said that would mean a tax cut this year of $360 for a couple and $180 for an individual.

Beyond that, the administration said that when the plan is fully phased in, six million families who now pay taxes no longer would be required to.

At the direction of Hastert and other GOP leaders, House Republicans are expected to advance other elements of Bush's larger tax cut program to the floor over the next several weeks, including marriage penalty relief, a child tax credit and estate tax relief or repeal.

House Democrats crafted an alternative, knowing it was doomed to defeat, but eager to highlight competing budget priorities. It was rejected on a vote of 273-155.

It called for $586 billion in tax cuts over 10 years, little more than one-third the size of the GOP measure. It would lower the tax rate from 15 percent to 12 percent on the first $20,000 of income for a couple, and provide marriage penalty relief and an additional break for lower-wage earners. Unlike the GOP measure, it includes no reductions in the income tax rates that apply further up the income ladder.

Winners should look to each other for ideas

Congratulations to all of the Student Governing Association presidential and vice presidential candidates who failed to make the runoff.

Now it is down to the two top candidates: the Lenkner/Bosco ticket and the Barker/Kaufman ticket. Students can vote online through KATS in the election runoff Tuesday from 7 a.m. until 5 p.m.

Whichever party wins, the victorious candidates need to examine the other candidates' platforms to incorporate ideas into their own goals for their term.

For instance, there should be clocks in every classroom. It is ridiculous that students pay such a large sum of money to attend a university where we sometimes don't know what time it is during class.

All of the candidates supported the mandatory housing inspections. This is a key issue for students, especially those who have had, or will have to live in sub-standard housing units.

Also, several candidates supported a much needed transportation system and improved advising. These two issues should be studied.

The winning ticket needs to stick with its own platform, but incorporating the ideas of other respectable leaders will be most beneficial for the student body.

LISTENING TO THE WORLD

Keeping up with current issues can inspire change, reform

ADAM HAYES/Collegian

The Collegian's Campus Fourum is an anonymous call-in system that allows readers to voice their opinions on topics

What kind of crap is it that they are going to cut Architecture college's budget?

It's not enough that the Union already charges outrageous prices for everything. They have to raise them even more. $1.10 for a 24-oz. fountain drink? Give me a break.

Gee, what a surprise, the two parties who spent the most money are in the runoff for the election. Way to go guys.

We'd like to thank the announcers for mispronouncing the winners of the SGA elections. A special thanks goes out to Nah. Nah. Nahga. Not gonna work here anymore anyway.

Rick Wooten. Three strikes, you are outta there.

Sarah McCaffrey, will you marry me?

I still say George for president.

I just found out that my summer internship with the state of Kansas is going to pay more than I originally thought because the governor called for a pay increase of all summer interns. Hmmm. The governor also called for budget cuts at all public universities. Coincidence? I think not.

Here is a little review about "15 Minutes." It sucked.

I was just wondering why we have break-away rims at the Rec if you get kicked out for breaking them away.

Yes, you can buy an election.

I don't care what anyone says. David Levin is still my hero.

It's a sad day at K-State when the Fourum doesn't fill up the whole column.

Question for Tuesday: How can the U.S. prevent school violence?

Children are being killed for going to school, the state has decided to cripple higher education, Bush thinks he is going to cut our taxes and East Stadium might be getting turf.

With so many things going on at the local and national level, it is hard to throw your arms around everything and get a clear look at what is really happening. Making your way through the maze of contradictions and issues can be daunting. How do you know what is right? How do you know what is really happening? How do you begin to understand it all? It begins with reading.

I lived in the dark for years. My freshman and sophomore years are a blank slate when it comes to national issues. I know I lived in Manhattan, went to class and was an all-around busy kid. That is all I remember. I don't think I picked up the Collegian or watched the news more than a handful of times. I was simply engrossed with my life.

It was as if I had been declared on the United States. I might have lazily lifted my head out of what ever book I was reading, taken a moment of silence, then went back to cramming for the test the next day.

Although I was learning a lot of textbook knowledge, I never felt the need to learn about current issues.

My best friend and I would talk a couple of times a week, and he would talk about national issues, or things that were affecting our home, and I would be clueless. I would try and fake my way through the conversation. It would go something like, "So, what do you think of the latest scandal with Clinton?" he would ask. I would reply "Oh, I don't know, seems bad." He was always searching for that deeper insight and me and my lack of knowledge on the issues would leave him with less than what he wanted.

One day, I was tired of feeling uninformed and apathetic. I made a pledge that I would begin listening to National Public Radio for at least a half hour every morning and read one whole newspaper every day (comics did not count). As I read, I felt myself becoming impassioned about the issues and actually caring about what was happening in the world. Sure, I still could not tell you who the speaker of the house was, or where the national unemployment rate was at, but I did begin picking up pieces of what was going on.

I will be the first to admit that it is so much easier to watch "Friends" instead of the evening news, or to listen to KSDB-FM 91.9 instead of National Public Radio, or sleep-in that extra half hour instead of getting up and checking out the New York Times. Honestly, it is easier to be uninformed. If you are uninformed, you don't find yourself wondering if your children will be too scared to go to school, or if our country will be slumping into a recession about the time you graduate, because you don't know about it and you don't care.

But much like we are what we eat, we are what we read. Somewhere in my naive little heart I have to believe if we all read more, we would care more. If we cared more, then we would become engaged in those issues that are sitting on our doorsteps and threatening to change our future. Sure, it is hard to make sense of everything that is out there, everything that is happening. Sure, the headlines will change tomorrow. But if we never read them, we won't have the chance to make a change — an impact on the next day.

I don't mean to insult anyone's intelligence. I know there are a lot of faithful CNN junkies out there and power to you. But when you go to class and people don't know there were riots last week, it makes you wonder.

The issues that are on hand today will affect us tomorrow. Even if you don't understand the issues, just reading about them will put questions in your mind and make your collective conscience go "hmm." Knowing what they are is half the battle and will propel the force to make the change.

Despite hard work, errors appear in paper

There's more to the Collegian than meets the eye.

This isn't to say we're involved in some covert conspiracy, although others would argue. I'm just saying there's more to the Collegian than the work of the writers and photographers you see in the paper every day. There also are people who put in several hours each day in the newsroom without having the luxury of seeing a byline or photo credit by their work.

We have a great front office staff, we have a staff that sells the ads that go into the paper and talented presentation team members who lay out the pages that contain the ads and stories. There's also the desk editors who assign the stories and deal with numerous complaints and concerns from Collegian readers. And, of course, there's the awesome online staff members who place the print version of what you see each day on the World Wide Web at the ungodly wee hours of the morning (props to Ken Wells and Becky Wilson).

And then there's the copy editors, journalists who are in a league of their own.

I work for the Collegian as its copy chief, and I supervise a staff of nine copy editors, whose sole job is to proofread local and Associated Press stories and photo cutlines for spelling, grammar, AP/house style and the like. A majority of the time, we do our job well. There are times, however, when mistakes slip through our fingers, for one reason or another. A name is misspelled. A word is misspelled in giant 72-point type in a headline on the front page. A grammatical error makes its way onto page five. And, most of the time, it just means we were sloppy and missed it.

Yes, that's right. We're human.

Not too many people realize this, though. There will be mistakes in the paper every day, for no newspaper is perfect. Think of it this way: the number of mistakes you see in the Collegian when you read it in the morning is only a tiny fraction of the spelling, grammar and style mistakes that were present when the story or outline was read by a desk editor or copy editor for the first time.

So, while we usually are successful in eliminating most of the nasty errors in the stories we read, there always will be a time when we didn't get something. Similarly, when you write a paper, your professors always remind you to proofread the paper before you turn it in. Do you sometimes miss a word spelling here or a comma there? Probably so.

In this area, it's always interesting getting feedback or comments from people. In fact, I've always told my copy editors that the best proofreaders are all of you, the Collegian readers. It shows that you're paying attention to our stories and reading them with a careful eye.

guest view

With this in mind, I'd like to propose a little contest.

The first five people to catch a spelling mistake in the Collegian, starting with today's issue, can come to Kedzie 116 and personally identify the error to me, and I will buy them a pop (or soda or whatever).

I'm usually in the Collegian newsroom at around 4 p.m. each day, Sunday through Thursday. Now, start reading and let's see how keen of an eye you possess. Good luck!

Pub crawl this Saturday to benefit deafblind kids

By QUINN ASPEGREN
Kansas State Collegian

With more than $2,000 raised for deafblind children last year, organizers of the highly anticipated second-annual Cat Crawl said they believe this Saturday's event will be another successful afternoon in Aggieville.

Katlyn's Hope, Inc. is sponsoring the Cat Crawl on Saturday with the help of five Aggieville bars and various Manhattan merchants. The pub crawl raises money for Katlyn's Hope, which is a non-profit organization for deafblind children.

Participants of this year's event can look forward to enjoying an afternoon of alcohol, food, fun and friends.

Crawlers will have the opportunity to take part in hula-hoop and twister contests, as well as a three-ball pool tournament in conjunction with the retro theme demonstrated at Fasi Eddy's, Safari Jack's Watering Hole, Auntie Mae's Parlor, Tula's Out of Bounds Sports Bar and Grill and Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

"We had almost 100 participants last year, and I think that we'll have at least as many this year, if not more. I've had people ask about the event in advance, and most have said that they plan to bring friends along," said Rhonda Lyne, Cat Crawl organizer and Katlyn's Hope volunteer.

There will be raffles giving away prizes from hair products and gift certificates to a Kansas City, Mo., getaway, as well as a silent auction featuring an official autographed football from the K-State football team.

"Each bar will have games and prizes for all the crawlers, so they don't feel like there's nothing to do but drink, because not all of our participants choose to do so. We don't play drinking games, of course, and we don't raise money from drinking. It comes from sponsors, donations and registration fees. It's all about having a good time and raising money for a good cause," Lyne said.

All of the proceeds from the Cat Crawl will go to Katlyn's Hope. The organization was founded by K-State alumna Shari Willis and her husband Jeff following the death of their deafblind infant daughter, Katlyn.

Since 1996, Katlyn's Hope has worked to raise funds and awareness for deafblind children and has awarded approximately 20 educational scholarships to children across the country.

This year's Cat Crawl will be something new at Safari Jack's, but bar manager J.R. Robl said they are looking forward to taking part.

"We wanted to help out a worthwhile cause. This is a different type of philanthropy. It's something that no one has to get all dressed up for. It's a normal, everyday activity that a lot of people do on a regular basis, so incorporating it into some type of fund raiser is a good idea. It's going to be a very laid-back event," Robl said.

Registration for the Cat Crawl will begin at 12:30 p.m. Saturday at Fast Eddy's.

There is a $15 registration fee which includes a T-shirt, snacks and chances to win prizes from Manhattan merchants.

Civil engineering laboratory working to improve roads

By LYNN TREVINO
Kansas State Collegian

Research by the Department of Civil Engineering is helping to improve the quality of roads in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri. The Civil Infrastructure Systems Laboratory is a large scale testing facility in Manhattan. The laboratory provides K-State civil engineers the opportunity to study damage caused to roads by natural loads and environmental effects.

However, roads and highways are not tested on a small scale. At the laboratory, engineers are able to construct pieces of highway and other large structures to conduct research. Researchers then have the ability to simulate environmental conditions, and increase the rate at which the large systems fail.

The results of the research are then used to determine the durability of road materials.

"The key is to take structures to the limit to see their endurance," civil engineering department head Lakshmi Reddi said.

Reddi said the Civil Infrastructure Systems Laboratory is there for civil engineering faculty as well as students.

"We intend to bring the information to the classroom and use the facility to have demonstrations for the existing classes," Reddi said.

The laboratory, a one-of-a-kind facility in the region, provides a great opportunity for civil engineering students and faculty to learn by being able to see and participate in large scale research Reddi said.

"All faculty have inventions, ideas or suggestions that they would like to give a try. Unless you have a place to try them, they will all stay on paper," said Hani Melhem, associate professor of civil engineering.

Research being conducted in the laboratory will be used to aid Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri's Departments of Transportation in building and maintaining roads. The four states' Departments of Transportation provide funding to maintain the laboratory and conduct research.

Cats secure KU rematch, pull off game-winning point in LAST-SECOND DASH

EVAN SEMON/Collegian

K-State forward Travis Reynolds calls for K-State's final time-out in the closing seconds of the Wildcats' 62-58 win over Nebraska on Thursday. Reynolds finished with 13 points, two of which secured the Wildcat victory with 1.5 seconds remaining in the game.

By MICHAEL NOLL
Kansas State Collegian

The play-by-play computer printout of K-State's 62-58 win over Nebraska made the Cats' winning basket seem so simple: "00:02, 58-60, made 2-Pnt by Reynolds, Travis."

Except it wasn't that easy. Facing a tied game with 23 seconds remaining, head coach Jim Wooldridge wanted point guard Larry Reid to take the last shot, especially since the junior already had scored a game-high 21 points.

But when Reid drove to the left side of the court, he drew so much attention from Nebraska (14-16), he was forced to give the ball to Reynolds.

"The clock was running down, and Coach called Flat, and I thought I was going to take the last shot," Reid said, "but I penetrated to my left side, and I dished it to him. I think he bobbled it a little bit, but he gained control of it again."

When Reynolds finally chased down the ball, the clock had run down to about three seconds, so he had no choice but to put up a fade-away, twisting, half-looking jump shot.

"We had to get something up," Reynolds said. "I heard Richie (Terry) out on the three-point line, screaming my name..."

That's when Wooldridge broke in. "I'm glad you didn't pass it to him," he said.

So was the rest of the team, as Reynolds' shot swished through the net with just 1.3 seconds left in the game. The senior ran, screaming, hands above his head, down the court while the Cat bench erupted with joy.

The Huskers felt a very different emotion.

"He turned around and hit the shot, and right then, my heart just dropped," senior guard Cookie Belcher said. "I didn't want my career to end on something like that, especially since we fought so hard in this game. Someone's career had to end tonight, and it just happened to be ours."

Following the shot, Nebraska immediately called a timeout and had the officials reset the clock at 1.5 seconds — enough time to try a full-court pass-and-shoot maneuver.

K-State guard Quentin Buchanan intercepted the deflected pass and tossed the ball into the stands as he was fouled by Belcher. Buchanan then hit two free throws to seal the win.

As sweet as the last-second victory was for K-State (11-17), earlier in the game, it looked as if the Cats were headed for a much larger winning margin. With 7:32 left in the first period, Buchanan was fouled on a two-point shot and drained the ensuing free throw from a Nebraska foul to give K-State a 22-14 lead.

From that point, though, the Huskers would go on a 16-6 run and enter halftime leading 30-28. Nebraska's plan was to wear down K-State and, for a while, it worked.

"I just felt like we needed to grind it out, try to wear them down," Nebraska head coach Barry Collier said. "If one team cracks, that gives a chance to take control of the game. But I never felt like we had control or they had control."

After 39 minutes and 58.5 seconds of trading made shots, blocked shots and turnovers, the game came down to one play — and this time, K-State made it.

The upset win set up a rematch with the No. 2 seed Kansas Jayhawks. Friday's game will be the third time the intrastate rivals have faced each other. The matchup, at 6 tonight, also will mark the eighth time in the past nine Big 12/Big 8 Tournaments that K-State has met the Jayhawks. The Cats have won only one of those games.

Nonetheless, Wooldridge said he expects the same enthusiasm from his team against Kansas that it showed against Nebraska.

"I think our team understands better today than at the beginning of the year what they have to do to compete with these kinds of teams. We can't back off of them. We can't be timid," Wooldridge said. "We have to go compete and give ourselves a chance. The alternative is not very good."

"I'm very proud of our effort tonight, and I suspect that we'll see the same kind of attitude tomorrow."

Team's progress shown through late-game victory

By DEREK BOSS
Kansas State Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — K-State's string of late-game misfortunes might have finally run out.

In what seemed to be somewhat of a precedent this season, the closing minutes always found a way to haunt the Wildcats in close ball games.

Against Oklahoma, K-State squandered a three-point lead in regulation and a one-point lead with 10 seconds remaining in overtime to fall to the Sooners, 63-64.

Two games later versus Nebraska in Manhattan, the Cats blew a one-point advantage with 1:24 left to hand the Huskers a 63-61 win.

Continuing the pattern, K-State expended a five-point cushion with just over a minute on the clock to Missouri on the road, culminating in a 66-70 loss. And at Oklahoma State, the Cats couldn't maintain a 47-46 lead in the closing seconds to fall plague to the Cowboys by five.

These might be enough last-minute tragedies to last two seasons.

But against Nebraska on Thursday night in the first round of the Phillips 66 Big 12 Tournament, the final stretch was kind to the purple — for once.

Travis Reynolds' off-balance, fade-away jumper with 1.3 seconds remaining found nothing but net as the Cats prevented history from repeating itself in the waning seconds.

In fact, Reynolds said all the losses this year only have made the team stronger. There was no need to block out those bad memories.

"I don't think I blocked it out — I think that helped me more than anything," Reynolds said. "I told our teammates coming out of the timeout, 'We've been here before.' Back in Manhattan, we gave the game away at the end, but Coach (Jim Wooldridge) preached to us then that players have got to make plays. That's one thing we wanted to do tonight coming down the stretch, and guys stepped up and made plays, and I think that's a credit to our team."

It simply was a contest that emphasized the progress K-State has made this year, through all the ups and downs, Wooldridge said.

"I thought it was a game that says a lot about who these kids are and what they developed into through the course of the year," he said. "I cite a five-point difference coming down the stretch, Nebraska had a lead on us, and I thought at that point things could get away from us."

"But defensively, we made some stops, we got some loose balls, got some defensive rebounds, blocked a shot — we found ourselves scrapping and scrapping. It wasn't very pretty, but this team held its composure and, as we all know, down the stretch with the possession left, found a way to win it."

That they did, although it might be hard to avoid focusing on the similarities between Thursday's game and the two teams' first meeting of the season Jan. 30.

"It's almost a mirror game of game one in Manhattan where we built up a little lead," Wooldridge said, as K-State led by as many as eight in the first half.

"But I've seen Nebraska play enough now where leads like that really don't mean that much. We're not a potent enough team to think that we can stretch something out against a Nebraska and run away with it in the second half."

Yet point guard Larry Reid said K-State's experience in close ball games this season, however negative they might be, proved to be an ally as the game wound down.

STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian

Larry Reid drives the lane during the second half of Thursday's 62-58 victory over Nebraska in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament in Kansas City, Mo. Reid lead the team in scoring with 21 of the Wildcats' points.

"We just had to want to win," Reid said. "At the end of those other games, I think the other team wanted it more than we did. So we just had to learn to win and want to win, and it paid off for us."

Now, Reynolds said he hopes Thursday's good fortune carries over into tonight's matchup with No. 2 seed Kansas.

"We played them well in Manhattan and took them down to the wire, and we'll come out and give a great effort again," he said. "Hopefully, we'll make them go down the stretch."

Women's tennis team bounces back with Big 12 Conference opener win

"If we come away from Texas with a good win, that will give us confidence. We then know we can kill teams and not worry about them being close matches."

— Petra Sedlmajerova, tennis player

By ERIKA SAUERWEIN
Kansas State Collegian

The tennis team's losing streak was short lived.

After dropping two matches to top ranked BYU and Notre Dame Feb. 25-26, the Wildcats quickly responded by winning its Big 12 Conference opener against Iowa State 6-1 last weekend.

"We were expected to win the match, so it is not a big thing," Petra Sedlmajerova said. "It is not a big confidence booster but, of course you feel better when you get a win."

K-State now is looking to improve on its 4-4 record and go 2-0 in the Big 12 when it faces Texas Tech (6-3) at 10 a.m. Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

Eva Novotna said the team needs to take the positives from the Iowa State tournament into Saturday's matchup.

"When I look back at the Iowa State match, we were ready to go and play," she said. "If we want to be considered a good team, we have to do that every time. We want to be ready to run over teams and we did that throughout the whole lineup."

The Wildcats have defeated the Red Raiders in the last three meetings, but head coach Steve Bietau said Texas Tech is a different team than what the Wildcats have seen before. The Raiders have new, young talent.

"Winning against them last year is old news," he said. "This is the first year their coach has been able to bring in her recruits. She is changing the face of the team. We have got to be prepared and ready to play."

The Raiders' top player is freshman Irina Tereshenko. She boasts a 7-2 record at the No. 1 singles position. She also is coming off a recent win over Baylor's 26th ranked Jahnvi Parekh in straight sets.

K-State's No. 1 singles player, Alena Jecminkova, has reason to boast, too. In K-State's loss to the Fighting Irish, she defeated the No. 2 nationally ranked player Michelle Dasso 6-2, 6-0.

"It is going to be a tough match for the No. 1 and No. 2 positions"

Bietau said. "Overall, this is definitely a winnable match, but we have a lot of respect for Texas."

Players said they are not worried about the Raiders' new lineup.

"Well, we have three new players as well," Sedlmajerova said, "and we have had a whole year to improve as a team. Every match you play is going to be different."

"If we come away from Texas with a good win, that will give us confidence. We then know we can kill teams and not worry about them being close matches."

Getting her groove on

Artist mixes jazz, rock, hip-hop, looks to connect with audience in Friday concert

STORY BY KRISTEN DYMACEK ■ COURTESY PHOTO

Patty Larkin's mixture of blues, jazz, pop, hip-hop and folk is a familiar sound for the BirdHouse concert series.

The singer/songwriter will be performing at 8 tonight at the Manhattan Arts Center for her third BirdHouse performance.

BirdHouse co-founder David Kamerer said Larkin's last two concerts in Manhattan were popular.

"Both concerts were just extraordinary," Kamerer said. "They were both sell-outs."

Larkin, who has recorded nine albums, her most recent being, "Regrooving The Dream," said her music is difficult to categorize.

"My music is influenced by everything around me," Larkin said. "There's rock, jazz, hip-hop. I just leave it up to the listener."

She said her songs are lyric-driven.

"My first few albums were about questioning God, religion and authority," she said. "Now it's about the angst of life: twists of fate."

"Regrooving The Dream," released last year, is a combination of several styles of music, Larkin said.

"It's something I wrote at the end of the last century. It's all American music. It's combining a lot of genres," she said.

Friday's performance will feature songs from "Regrooving The Dream," as well as some of her older songs and some audience requests.

Larkin's publicist, Cyndi Harles, said what makes Larkin's concerts good is her ability to reach her audiences through her guitar playing and storytelling.

"They are very personal performances," Harles said.

"You feel you are really getting to know her, like you're sitting around the table shooting stories with her."

Larkin said she believes making connections with her audiences is important.

"When I go to a concert, one thing I am looking for is a moment of connection with the artist. I want to walk away with a little insight into that artist," she said. "That's also what I want to give people who come to hear me."

Kamerer said Larkin's live performances have a lot to offer.

"It's a very theatrical show," he said. "There are no wasted movements. There's no wasted energy. She really fills up a room."

Larkin won't be the only one performing Friday night. Boston musician Peter Mulvey will be opening the BirdHouse concert.

"He's an amazing musician," Kamerer said. "He's funky and rhythmic and very atmospheric."

He said the combination of Larkin and Mulvey will provide an entertaining concert.

"There will be lots of new songs from Larkin and a really compelling opener, so it'll be a really good evening," he said.

MORE INFO?

Patty Larkin will perform at 8 tonight at the Manhattan Arts Center. Tickets are $12 for students and seniors and $15 for the general public. They can be purchased at the Manhattan Arts Center or the Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville.

Opera presents elaborate sets, veteran actors

By BRENDA KIRKHAM
Kansas State Collegian

A tangled royal love triangle is the plot for the Italian opera, "Aida," to be performed at 8 p.m. Saturday at McCain Auditorium.

The opera captures a typical love triangle, a popular theme in movie and storylines, but takes place in the time of the pharaohs, said Jean Sloop, professor of music at K-State.

Aida is the daughter of a king whose country has recently been conquered by Egypt. She is captured and forced to be the slave of the king of Egypt's daughter, Amneris.

During her time in captivity, Sloop said, Aida falls in love and the love is returned by Radames, captain of the guard for the Egyptian army.

The story develops when Amneris decides that she also is in love with Radames, and the plot thickens from there, Sloop said.

"It's star-crossed lovers — is what you might call the whole thing," she said.

A pre-performance lecture will be presented by Sloop. She said she will explain the story line to the audience, and will discuss the circumstances that existed during the time the play was written.

Sloop said the opera company uses elaborate sets and costume designs.

Such attention to detail is very rare for a touring opera company that has to transport their props all over the world in trucks, she said.

Thom Jackson, marketing and development officer at McCain, said the opera company, Teatro Lirico D'Europa, also is known for its use of a full size orchestra and large cast, both unusual for a touring company. The orchestra is made up of 50 musicians, and the cast is 45 people, Jackson said.

Jenny Kelly, U.S. representative and tour manager for the European touring opera company, said the cast members are from diverse backgrounds.

"We hold auditions in different sorts of places all over the world," Kelly said.

The company is fortunate to have an artistic director who can speak seven different languages, so even though the cast speaks many different languages, communication isn't a problem, Kelly said. The opera is in Italian, but English lyrics will be projected on a screen so the audience knows what is being said.

Kelly said the cast is full of veterans who are ready to put on a good show.

"These people have been in the business so long and they're professionals," she said.

Kelly said the quality of the cast members and orchestra, along with the elaborate sets, all are very appreciated by audiences around the world.

"It's amazing what you're getting for a touring opera," she said. "People are amazed by the quality and substance."

"Aida" is the company's most successful opera since the company was formed in 1986, Kelly said.

"There's been a standing ovation everywhere we've been," she said.

Jackson said he hopes the opera will attract a large audience due to the company's excellent reputation and the fact that "Aida" is a popular opera right now. He said tickets are selling quickly for the Saturday performance.

If the audience and others want operas to continue being performed at McCain, Jackson said they need to make their presence known at performances such as "Aida." Jackson said if McCain management feels there is no interest in operas being performed, it is unlikely that many more will be scheduled to appear at McCain.

Jackson said the audience likely will appreciate and enjoy "Aida."

"It's an absolutely wonderful opera," Jackson said.

Sloop said she also believes the audience will be in awe of the opera and its quality.

"It is very colorful and has wonderful music," she said.

class sizes larger.

Situations where courses such as continuing education are offered might be offered less frequently and in different locations, Holen said.

While some students in the college said they are unaware of the potential cuts, some addressed other education concerns.

Livie Bennett, senior in elementary education, said she is just as concerned about possible education cuts in K-12 education as the cuts in her college.

Bennett student teaches and said the cuts might cause some schools with decreased enrollment to close. That, she said, would take away from the community feel of neighborhoods.

"I think it would take away from the historical value," Bennett said. "It would likely mean larger classes and redistribution of all the kids."

Holen said that as new teachers graduate from K-State, they need the necessary educational background and programs to perform well. Those programs and background, he said, are made possible by the technology match money. He said the college has installed new technology that will enable classes to hand out laptops and connect to the Internet with air cards.

Now, with the threat of the loss of the technology match fee, that program might have to be delayed because of a lack of funds. Students now pay $1 per credit hour for technology, and that is matched by $2 from the state of Kansas.

However, despite the threat of lagging revenues, he said he thinks the possible budget cuts should not stand in the way of progress.

"If you don't make quality and the future of the program your priority in bad budget times," Holen said. "I think you are making a serious leadership error."

Susan Allen, director of the Women's Center, is one of Fink's bosses at the handicap center and said the experience has shaped her development.

"Her disability isn't an issue or a

Elizabeth Crain, assistant director and Sexual Violence Education Coordinator at the Women's Center, said she admires Fink's strength.

"A day that would frustrate me with things, Michayla would breeze through," Crain said.

A Manhattan firefighter breaks through the east side wall of Bob's Diner to extinguish a fire that started around 5:30 p.m. Sunday. No one was injured in the blaze.

Bob's Diner damaged in evening fire

By KRISTEN DYMACEK
Kansas State Collegian

A fire at Bob's Diner on Sunday night resulted in some structural damage.

Manhattan battalion chief Jerry Snyder said the fire, which broke out at 1103 N. Third St. around 5:30 p.m., started in the attic area.

"The fire was confined only to that area," Snyder said. "Right now, we don't know how the fire started up there."

He said there were no injuries.

Phil Brenner said he had just walked into Bob's Diner to eat when employees noticed the fire.

"A couple of people walked outside and then came back in and said we all needed to get out," Brenner said.

"You could kind of smell something inside," he said.

"Once we got outside, there was a lot of smoke coming out of the roof."

In order to get to the fire, firefighters had to break through the ceiling and the gables on the roof. Snyder said there was some damage from the fire, smoke and smoldering insulation.

"There is some minor structural damage," Snyder said. "But there's probably more damage from what we did to put the fire out."

Bob's Diner owner Bob Iacobellis would not comment. It is uncertain how long the diner will remain closed.

Cold weather slows work on monolith

By JESSICA PITTS
Kansas State Collegian

Manhattan Christian College is facing another delay in the uncovering of the Ten Commandments monolith because of cold temperatures.

"The weather is preventing us from completing the project," said Lorrie Jo Stanford, vice president of business affairs. "By the time we were ready to put the finishing touches on the area, the weather turned bad, and we had to wait."

The monolith, once a feature at Manhattan City Hall, is part of a display area in front of the MCC campus on Anderson Avenue.

"We also had some last minute changes in the project having to do with some donor plaques, some additional stones that took a while to get here," Stanford said. "We just weren't able to beat the weather."

Candidates prepare for runoff

By LYNNE HERMANSEN
Kansas State Collegian

Two of the five teams for president and vice president are preparing for the final stretch of the Student Governing Association elections Tuesday.

Travis Lenkner/Mary Bosco and Kyle Barker/Brandon Kauffman received the top votes in last Wednesday's election.

Because no one pair received 50 percent of the votes, the race will continue with a runoff election.

Lenkner, senior in print journalism and pre-law, and Bosco, senior in public relations, received 1,285, or 34.4 percent of the votes. Barker, junior in public relations, and Kauffman, junior in political science, received 906, or 24.2 percent of the votes. The total votes cast were 3,704.

Bosco said they have worked hard and plan to continue talking to students.

"We are going to talk to more students and encourage more to vote," she said.

Lenkner said a lot of his and Bosco's plans are to continue campaigning just as they have been.

Before Tuesday, Barker and Kauffman said they plan to talk to more organizations.

"We just want to keep speaking with people and continuing to get the word out," Barker said.

They said they will have a booth set up in the K-State Student Union and will make more signs and T-shirts.

Making family a priority

■ 5th-year architecture student puts family life in front of education, work.

School and work sometimes get in the way of the most important thing in Jason Furnell's life — his family.

The fifth-year student in architecture has been married to Margene Furnell since 1996, and they have a two-year old boy and another child due in late April.

His busy days start with work from 8 a.m. to noon every weekday at Manhattan's Bruce McMillon AIA Architects PA. Then he goes to class in the afternoon and does studio work at Seaton Hall almost every evening.

"On a decent day, I'm home before midnight," Jason said. "Some days I'll just get home to shower, sleep, and then it starts all over again."

When he gets too busy, he said he tries to cut back. "I try to take a step back and say 'no' to studio and relax with my family," Jason said. "If I get behind in studio, so be it."

Since Jason often gets tied up with studio work, Margene and their son Blake visit Jason in studio almost every night.

"We'll come and bring him dinner at night," said Margene, who graduated from K-State in 1998 in secondary education after only 3 years in college. "We're busy, but we keep our priorities where they should be."

Teri Briggs, fifth-year architecture student and friend of Jason and Margene, said the couple always puts family first.

"One day, when we all had work to do in studio, Jason said 'No, it's Blake's birthday. I'm staying home,'" Briggs said. "They're a great family, and they do a good job of balancing everything."

The Furnells try to set aside one day a week as family day. On Sundays, the family goes to church and Services for student counseling could decrease with budget cuts

By NANCY HULL
Kansas State Collegian

University Counseling Services could see a 70-percent decrease in state funding if Gov. Bill Graves' proposed $2.1-million budget cut for K-State is approved.

Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services, said the setback would hit the service's operating expenses — such as phone bills, mailing expenses and other office supplies.

"Basically, we'll receive very minimal support from the state," Newton said.

There are two ways the service, which is in the Lafene Health Center, could generate the revenue needed to replace the loss, Newton said.

Consultations with other services, such as allowing staff to teach classes on campus to generate money, is one option.

Raising service fees for counseling sessions and tests also would be considered. Currently, student privilege fees cover the first four counseling sessions, and every session after four is an additional $10.

Newton said a possible way to generate revenue would be to drop the number of free sessions to two. He said he would prefer to allow his staff to teach classes instead of charging students more.

"Students contribute by privilege fee, and they deserve service. We want them to use services without feeling a financial pinch," he said.

Newton said if a department asked one of his employees with a doctoral degree to teach a class, about 20 percent of the employee's time would be sacrificed.

"There would be money to help pay for pencils, but we'd lose time," he said.

Ashley Matthews, freshman in pre-health professions program and office assistant at University Counseling Services, said she wouldn't want to see service prices increase.

"That would take away from the benefits of counseling services," Matthews said.

She also said doctors sacrificing their time would make reaching the needs of patients more difficult.

"I'd hate to see the increase in fees, so I'd rather see doctors have to juggle their time," she said.

This isn't the first time University Counseling Services has seen a setback, though.

"We've had a history of several reductions," Newton said. "There have been very few enhancements."

But, he said the proposed cuts are a crisis.

"It's a crisis for the whole campus," Newton said.

University Counseling Services operates separate from other services in Lafene, and it is the only service offered inside Lafene's building that would see cuts.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said since Lafene's services depend mainly Space station equipment installed in spacewalk

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Two spacewalking astronauts installed new hardware and relocated equipment early Sunday on the international space station, in the process completing the longest such excursion in space shuttle program history.

Astronauts Jim Voss and Susan Helms had finished their work on space station Alpha but couldn't end their spacewalk until flight controllers determined their help wasn't needed in relocating a docking port in order to make way for a module filled with supplies.

Their spacewalk lasted 8 hours and 56 minutes. The prior longest spacewalk in the shuttle program, in May 1992, lasted 8 hours 29 minutes.

Voss and Helms spent the early hours of Sunday disconnecting cables that were helping to hold a docking port in place on Alpha — set to be their new home for the next four months. Voss and Helms were delivered by space shuttle Discovery as part of Alpha's first replacement crew.

After the cables were disconnected, astronaut Andrew Thomas used the shuttle's robotic arm to grab the docking port. He moved it a short way to another part of the station to make room for the Leonardo cargo carrier that was ferried up aboard Discovery.

Leonardo was to be temporarily attached to Alpha late Sunday. After completing their work, Voss and Helms waited in the shuttle's airlock to see if Thomas needed their help, which in the end was not required. The process of attaching the docking port to its new location took longer than expected.

"Thanks for your great work. We're glad to see [the docking port] in its long-term home," Mission Control told the shuttle crew after the port was in place.

$1.6 trillion tax cut might be scaled back

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott raised the possibility Sunday that Congress could scale back President George W. Bush's tax cuts in the future if projected surpluses do not materialize — a shift apparently intended to win support from reluctant centrists of both parties.

The suggestion from Lott, R-Miss., comes one day after Bush indicated he might be willing to compromise on his $1.6 trillion tax cut and just a few days after a nationwide poll found that Americans would overwhelmingly support a tax cut if it were automatically pared down in the absence of a surplus.

Bush has opposed automatic triggers that would make tax cuts contingent on reaching goals in paying down the debt or having a certain level of surplus money available each year.

Tax relief passed the Republican-controlled House last week with little support from Democrats, whose help will be crucial if Bush's plan is to pass in a Senate that is evenly split between Republicans and Democrats.

Lott said a trigger would inevitably undo the tax cuts. But for the first time, he suggested an alternative.

"I think that if you put a waiver in there for the president or if you had some sort of a midcourse adjustment opportunity where you sort of look at what's happening and set up a process — but a trigger, which is automatic, it's sort of like, now you see it, now you don't," Lott told "Fox News Sunday."

Justice Department to place FBI under review

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The FBI will be scrutinized in an internal Justice Department investigation to determine how a former agent allegedly sold U.S. secrets to Russia for 15 years without being detected, Attorney General John Ashcroft said Sunday.

Ashcroft has ordered the department's inspector general to review FBI security procedures in the wake of espionage charges against former agent Robert Philip Hanssen, a counterintelligence expert. The investigation could lead to a recommendation of discipline if there were any wrongdoing by anybody aside from Hanssen in this case, department spokeswoman Mindy Tucker said.

A similar inspector general investigation in 1994 led to the reprimand of 11 senior CIA officers in the Aldrich Ames spy case.

This investigation will be conducted simultaneously with a separate review ordered by the department immediately after Hanssen's arrest last month. William Webster, a former CIA and FBI director, is evaluating the FBI's internal security procedures and will recommend changes to prevent future espionage cases.

Ashcroft said on ABC's "This Week" that the inspector general would be following avenues that might not otherwise be determined productive avenues for examination by Webster.

Ashcroft said Hanssen, a 25-year FBI veteran and counterintelligence expert, was responsible for a grave loss in national security. Hanssen is accused of giving Moscow 6,000 pages of secret U.S. documents since 1985 in exchange for more than $1.4 million in cash and diamonds.

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., speaks during the Kappa Sigma 82nd annual Pig Dinner Reunion on Saturday night at the Holidome. STEVEN DEARINGER/Collegian

Senator addresses members of fraternity for 82nd reunion

By OLENA NIKOLAYENKO
Kansas State Collegian

Kappa Sigma, K-State's fourth largest fraternity, celebrated its 82nd Pig Dinner Reunion this weekend with Sen. Pat Roberts as the honorary speaker for the banquet.

Brothers of the fraternity, both active and alumni, made their way to the Holidome on Saturday night to revive the spirit of friendships they have developed over the years and bring back the memories of their student lives at K-State.

The goals and values of the fraternity are just as relevant today as they were in 1919, Roberts said.

Although the senator was initiated into another fraternity at K-State, Phi Kappa Alpha, he said that the experiences still are very similar.

"The friends you make in a fraternity are for your lifetime," Roberts said.

Roberts recalled a change his fellow students on the Interfraternity Council brought about in 1956.

"We decided to outlaw 'hell week' into help week — so that pledges went out and did community services," Roberts said.

Evan Davis, 88, has been actively involved in Kappa Sigma activities since his initiation in 1932. He also attended the dinner.

"It helped me develop into the person I am now," Davis said.

He said he remembers the days when there were no residence halls at K-State.

"You could live either in a fraternity house or in a private house," Davis said.

As a major in architecture, he had his hand in designing the first residence hall on campus, Marlatt Hall.

Kappa Sigma honored those alumni who did outstanding jobs in their careers, communities or fraternity. Dennis Anderson's, John Eggerman's, Thomas Tuggle's and Albert Engle's relatives received a personal plaque to take home.

"Kappa Sigma was in his thoughts up to his last days," Chris Engle, who joined the brotherhood in 1982, said about his deceased father.

Thomas Tuggle, master of ceremonies, said the fraternity has had a successful year.

"The chapter was ranked the seventh best in Kappa Sigma national fraternity," he said.

The reunion provided K-State students with a great opportunity to get in touch with the alumni.

It is a chance for current actives and pledges to meet those who were in the same position many years before. Frank Salb, sophomore in finance, said.

In addition, the chapter gave a warm welcome to a few brothers from other states.

"Being the first time in Manhattan, I was absolutely amazed by the hospitality of the fraternity," said Craig Lowden, Kappa Sigma member from Arizona and consultant of Fraternity Management Group. "It speaks well of the values of the fraternity."

Ballot review finds Gore Florida winner

The Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — A ballot design that confused voters into choosing two candidates cost Democrat Al Gore 6,607 votes in Palm Beach County, The Palm Beach Post reported in its Sunday edition.

The newspaper counted more than 19,000 overvotes, or ballots on which more than one vote was recorded for a presidential candidate. It concluded the net gain of votes for Gore would have been 10 times more than he needed to erase Republican George W. Bush's slim margin of 537 votes in the state.

Many voters had complained that the ballot was confusing because candidates' names appeared on both sides of the punch card with holes in the middle. They expected the holes to select Bush and Gore to be the first two choices as required by Florida statutes, but instead found Buchanan, on a facing page, located between them.

According to the newspaper's review, 5,330 ballots were thrown out because voters punched chads for Gore and Reform Party candidate Pat Buchanan, whose name appeared just above Gore's.

Buchanan's name appeared just below Bush on the ballot.

The two Gore combinations, minus the Bush-Buchanan votes, add up to 6,607 lost votes for Gore.

Bosco wins contest, kisses pig to fund spring break trip

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
Kansas State Collegian

Pat Bosco planted a wet one on a farm-animal friend Friday afternoon as about 30 onlookers stared in interest.

Bosco, dean of student life and vice president of institutional advancement, was the lucky winner of the "Kiss the Pig" contest.

For the contest, a table was set up from March 5-8 in the K-State Student Union, where passersby could place a certain amount of money in a box marked with the name of a well-known personality from K-State or the surrounding community.

At the end, the person with the most money in his or her box had to kiss a pig at 12:30 p.m. Friday in the Union Courtyard. For the contest, one dollar was the equivalent to one vote. Candidates in the running included Student Body President Jake Worcester.

Manhattan mayor Karen McCulloh and Electronic Collegian editor and Collegian columnist Ken Wells.

The purpose of the contest was to fund an alternative spring break for students to go to San Juan, Texas, where students will work with migrant farm workers to educate them about workers' rights, wages and unions, as well as assisting with painting buildings and taking care of yards.

When the votes were tallied, however, it was Bosco who won.

"I thought, 'There's no way I'm going to win,'" Bosco said. "When they asked me to do it, in a weak moment, I said 'yes.'"

"I honestly didn't think I'd have to kiss a pig," he said. "I thought it was some kind of joke."

Bosco said one thing stuck out in his mind when he kissed the pig.

"All I remember is facial hair. I did it as quickly as possible," he said.

Worcester, senior in agricultural economics, said he was pleased to be able to assist the students.

"I was happy to help out," he said. "It sounded like a fun deal, and it's for a good cause."

"There was some pretty good competition, but I knew it wouldn't be me, so it worked out well."

Bosco said that, despite having to kiss a pig, he believes in the cause behind the contest.

"It did touch me as something my family and I have believed in for a long time," Bosco said.

Abby Hall, event coordinator and sophomore in human ecology and mass communications, said she was pleased with the success of the event.

"I think it went fairly well," she said. "We raised about $175, which will fund our lodging and travel expenses for the trip."

Bosco said that while he was reluctant to participate in the event, it was interesting nonetheless.

"K-State, community service and a pig dressed in purple: What a combination," he said.

No excuses not to vote in SGA runoff election

Tomorrow is the big day. The day when students will decide between the top two Student Senate presidential and vice presidential parties: Kyle Barker/Brandon Kauffman or Travis Lenkner/Mary Bosco.

Students can vote online via KATS from 7 a.m. until 5 p.m. Students, regardless of their year or major, should see voting as an opportunity for them to express goals they think should be accomplished for the following year.

In last week's election, Lenkner/Bosco received 1,285 votes, 34.4 percent of the votes.

Barker/Kauffman received 906, 24.2 percent of the votes.

But it definitely is going to be a close race. The numbers from last week are not truly representative of which ticket is going to be victorious because now, instead of having five choices, voters have two.

The run-off election is one of the most important events of this semester, but the true effects most likely will not be obvious until next year.

It is in every student's best interest to vote. There are no excuses for people who choose not to make their voices, or in this case, their votes be heard.

Minority actors consistently overlooked during Oscar selections

I have never wanted to win an Oscar. I look silly in a tux, my fear of public speaking would make for a lousy acceptance speech, and my last name would surely get mispronounced even more than it does now. Since I'm not a film star, though, I am probably in no such danger.

Don't be so sure. Many Hollywood insiders will tell you that being a film star has little to do with it. Sure, Julia Roberts' chances of winning a little butt-naked statue next week would be a lot slimmer if she weren't a 44-ounce megastar, but redheads are the exception to just about every rule. The real key to getting into the trophy demographic is not a matter of who you are. It's about what you're not.

I hate that it's been 61 years since Hattie McDaniel became the first black actor to win an Oscar, and I still find myself writing this column, but the numbers speak for themselves. Statistically, you're more likely to find an African-American hiding behind the sofa at a surprise party for Pat Buchanan than you are to find one on a list of Oscar nominees.

Whose fault? Rest assured that Academy members won't be taking the blame. They're falling over themselves to congratulate each other on nominating not one, but two Latino actors this year (Javier Bardem and the tragically cool Benicio Del Toro), not to mention throwing 10 nominations to "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon." Ang Lee's exhilarating martial arts masterwork. Both Bardem and Del Toro give most of their performances in Spanish, and "Crouching Tiger" is entirely in Chinese. So with so many subtitles around, how can the academy be blamed for lack of diversity?

And besides, didn't they just give an Oscar to that "Show me the money" guy like five years ago or something? He was black, wasn't he?

Hollywood filmmakers won't be blamed. Steven Soderbergh's drug epic "Traffic," the best of the five Best Picture nominees, features a dynamite performance by Don Cheadle, and the cast of Ridley Scott's "Gladiator" includes West African Djimon Hounsou. Both black actors are first billed.

Both also play sidekicks. Cheadle is one of the finest actors working in Hollywood (remember the porn star who dreamed of selling stereo equipment in "Boogie Nights"?), and has proved consistently excellent in a variety of films. So why has he played nothing but supporting roles while mooks like David Arquette and Adam Sandler have multiple projects developed around them?

Well-written roles for black actors are so few and far between that many multi-faceted black stars come off looking like one-hit wonders.

Do we really believe that Cuba Gooding Jr.'s 15 minutes are already up because his "Jerry McGuire" role was just a good fit? We might never know because there's no way of telling how broad or limited his talent is when he's stuck in flicks such as "Instinct" and "Chill Factor."

Lest we forget Angela Bassett, who was uncanny as Tina Turner in "What's Love Got to Do With It?" Surely this tough, articulate actress is capable of many more performances that are equal or greater in quality. Same goes for Pam Grier, who in "Jackie Brown" was a more believable grown-up than Meg Ryan will ever be.

The aforementioned names show up every year in March as entertainment journalists write the annual "Why can't black actors get work in this town?" piece to coincide with the Academy Awards. As this year is no different, I find myself asking, "What is it going to take?" What kind of primal scream or race riot is necessary to make the Hollywood dark suits understand that if they make quality movies featuring black actors, WE WILL STILL GO TO THE MOVIES? What the hell is Hollywood so afraid of?

The same can be said of women's roles, of course, and of gay characters, or any other ethnic minority you can name. But the first black actor to win an Oscar back in 1939 played a slave, and the most recent one, in 1996, portrayed an exploited football player. The progress in between has been a snail's pace.

If you watch the Oscars on March 25, don't expect much color, save the outrageous evening gowns. As long as the industry's Boys Club remains in tact, only white actors will be trusted with the responsibility of keeping Hollywood in the black.

Excitement comes from planning, not taking trip

Well, the weather turned colder, and the days grew shorter. The wind blew harder, and the birds all flew south. First semester was over and just like that, winter break had arrived and, almost immediately thereafter, ended.

Once school started again after winter break, life just sort of seemed to run away with us. We were all so weighted down with events of the present, spring break was little more than a memory of plans for the past. Padre fell between the same cracks that Hawaii had. None of us ever said that we weren't going to go anymore, we just stopped talking about it altogether.

About two weeks ago it finally hit me. I did not have any plans for spring break. What was once this beautiful answer to every college student's dream had now vanished into nothing.

Naturally, at this point it was too late to start planning again. The package deal, complete with hotel rooms and a drink bracelet, just wasn't going to happen. We weren't going to Hawaii, we weren't going to Padre, we weren't even going skiing. Sigh.

A few nights ago, in a futile attempt to salvage our faltered enthusiasm, one of my friends suggested that we just take off and go.

"We could put a topper on the back of Jeff's pick-up truck and all pile in the back. We could take turns sleeping back there, and driving, and paying for gas, and we could bring our own food and everything. It doesn't really matter where we go, we could just head South until we are in Mexico. C'mon guys. We could still do this. Is anybody with me?"

We all just kind of sat around and looked at each other. It sounded a little too rushed and spontaneous to me. Not exactly the tropical paradise we had planned.

So, of course the trip is a no-go. However, it did spark an idea in our little brains. Maybe we couldn't do it at spring break, but with the right mind-set and enough desire, we could definitely do it this summer.

Only now we want a Volkswagen bus, and we want to paint rainbows on the side and load up all of our friends (the spring break rejects) and head across country, without a specific destination. Carefree for the summer. Playing a guitar in the moonlight (assuming one of us can play the guitar), baking in the warm summer sun, seeing sights we always wanted to see. Hippy trippin' across the United States, just like in the movies.

It's a beautiful idea, don't you think? And I bet we could do it. Sure, we didn't make it to Padre. But those things happen. This cross-country tour is a much better idea anyway. I mean, really, the only thing we are lacking is a VW bus.

So for all of you who are going to make it out of Manhattan for spring break next week, I hope you have an awesome time. Whether you will be sunning yourself on a beach somewhere or cruising down the ski slopes, I admire the fact that your plans actually came through.

As for the rest of you, who are going to be living it up in Manhattan, I'll see you down in Aggieville. I am sure that we can all find something to do. And if you have access to a VW bus, let me know. You might be stuck here next week, but the summer could be a different story. There is still room in our hippy-trip fantasy for a couple more spring break rejects to come along.

Mistakes made regarding K-State underground site

Editor,

I, as are a lot of other informed people, am outraged about the statements made by Jon Krasnoff in the March 7th Collegian. He made several incorrect statements about the KStateUnderground.com Web site, its content and its policies regarding that content. Only some of which follow, and you are free to check my quotes as I am using factual information, compared to hearsay.

Jon makes the statement, "posting these pictures could possibly be against the law." When you open up your home to the public, whether it is to serve alcohol or milk and cookies, it becomes a public place, hence the law against running an "open saloon." While in a public place, and in view of a camera, you are responsible for your actions. Since all the pictures on KStateUnderground.com were taken in public places, in view of the camera, the pictures are not illegal, and in fact, KStateUnderground.com owns the pictures and is free to do as they like with those pictures. I offer an example the "Girls Gone Wild" videos.

In that same paragraph he goes on to describe the content of those pictures as "contain[ing] activities such as underage drinking and sexual nudity." Take a picture of someone drinking a beer, take it to the police as evidence and see what they say. The pictures are of people, some of whom who are under 21, drinking something. With no proof of what is in the cup, the people are in no danger whatsoever of legal troubles. And as for the "sexual nudity" on the site, there is none other than two girls a few months ago who had their chests used as billboards for the Bearded holes band, and they gave their permission for those pictures to be posted. None of the girls who flashed the KStateUnderground camera at Mardi Gras parties ever had those pictures published. The brownie mix wrestling at Safari Jack's also had moments of nudity, and those too were never published. The site has a policy against publishing nudity in general. And if you think it was easy to look through 300 pictures of girls covered in brownie mix trying to remove the pictures of nipples, think again.

And in the granddaddy of chuckles, Jon demands, "The people who are in the pictures have a right to have their pictures taken off the site or a share of the income that K-StateUnderground earns." Everyone who has ever requested to have his or her pictures taken off the site has had it done as quickly as possible. A good example of this is a member of the site, who was in the background of the photo's actual subject with his tongue and hands in odd places on his dance partner. He e-mailed the site the day after the pictures went on the site, asked them to be removed before his girlfriend found out what he meant by "studying," and it was done as it always is, as quickly as possible. The site cannot get 300 consent forms signed every night, so removing photos when requested is the only method of consent that is feasible. If Jon truly wishes the site to share its profits with the 1,000 people in the pictures, fine, KStateUnderground.com owes you a nickel.

Distance runners finish well at NCAA Indoor Track, Field

Junior Shadrack Kimeli finished fifth in the 3,000 meters, senior Korene Hinds finished sixth in the mile and the women's distance medley relay team placed third to lead the K-State track and field team at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships on Friday and Saturday.

Kimeli earned fifth with a time of 8:07.98, his second-best time of the season and the fourth best in K-State history. He also is the Cats' first men's All-American since 1999.

Hinds placed sixth with a time of 4:44.71 and improved over her ninth-place finish at last year's Indoor Championships. The relay team of Amy Mortimer, Amanda Crouse, Nicole Grose and Hinds ran a time of 11:12.90 to finish third.

Other athletes placed but didn't earn points. Rebekah Green, the second-ranked shot putter entering the championships, finished 10th with a throw of 51-0.25. Terresha Derosssett placed 14th out of 17 competitors in the women's high jump with a mark of 5-9.75.

Terence Newman failed to make the final in the 60-meter preliminaries, as he scored a time of 6.77 seconds.

Overall, the K-State men's team placed 44th with four points, and the women's team finished 25th with nine points.

Offensive improvements not enough for K-State baseball

LINCOLN, Neb. — Ninth-ranked Nebraska used two big innings, including a four-run seventh inning with the score knotted at 4-4, to extend its winning streak to 10 games in a come-from-behind 9-6 victory over K-State on Friday afternoon at Buck Belzer Stadium.

With the victory, Nebraska improved its record to 12-3 and 4-0 in the Big 12, while K-State fell to 6-8 overall and 1-5 in conference action. Despite the loss, K-State seemed to find its offensive rhythm again as the Cats scored six runs and posted double-digit hits for the first time in seven games. The Cats had five extra-base hits, including two, two-run home runs, compared to Nebraska's one total extra-base hit.

"I was happy the way we hit the ball today," coach Mike Clark said. "However, we made too many mental mistakes when they gave us some opportunities."

Josh Cavender, Osmar Castillo, Nick Sorensen and Kasey Weishaar each collected two hits in the game to lead K-State offensively, while Pat Maloney and Ty Soto each turned in two RBIs apiece on two-run home runs. With his double in the fourth inning, Cavender has reached base at least once in all 14 games this season.

Nebraska outfielder John Cole posted a 3-for-4 afternoon with one RBI and one run scored, while outfielder Jeff Leise and second baseman Will Bolt each tallied two RBIs in the victory.

Reigning Big 12 Player of the Year Shane Komeine earned his fourth win of the season, as he allowed six runs (five earned) on 11 hits with nine strikeouts and one walk in seven innings of work.

The final two games of the series were canceled due to extreme cold weather and impending inclement conditions and can't be rescheduled under Big 12 rules.

Fairy tale ends for K-State in Big 12 tourney 2nd round

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — K-State might have acted the part of Cinderella on Thursday, knocking off higher-seeded Nebraska, but against Kansas on Friday, the Cats played the role of the ugly stepsister — the really ugly one.

After answering a Jayhawk 8-0 run to draw the score to within 11-12, K-State allowed Kansas to go on a 25-12 run and eventually take a halftime lead of 41-21. For the Cats, who eventually would lose 63-94, the game was all downhill from there.

The second half featured two intentional fouls, one on each team, a technical on K-State head coach Jim Woodridge, a pushing/talking match involving the coaches and players for both teams and a generally embarrassing conclusion to an embarrassing first half for the Cats.

"After battling hard all season, it's really disappointing to go out like this," forward Travis Reynolds said.

Little went K-State's way the entire game, as the Cats shot just 28.8 percent, turned the ball over 20 times and gave up 26 points off of those turnovers.

K-State was knocked out of the Big 12 Tournament by the Jayhawks for the eighth time in the past nine years. However, that is no reason to discount the Cats' work throughout the season, Woodridge said.

"A lot happened this year to build on and be positive about," he said. "We established how we were going to coach and what we expect from our players. As we go into the off-season, we will look to raise the bar in that."

K-State women's tennis team wins 6-1 against the Red Raiders in home match

By ERIKA SAUERWEIN
Kansas State Collegian

The No. 1 doubles team of Alena Jecminkova and Eva Novotna set the tone for the Wildcats' 6-1 victory over Texas Tech on Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

The duo found themselves down 4-1 in the match but quickly made adjustments to eventually come out on top 8-6.

"We had difficulty getting points on their serves and went down by three games," head coach Steve Bietau said. "But they showed good composure, adjusted, came back and handled it. To come back and win in that match really pushed the momentum our way."

The Wildcats would sweep all three double matches. K-State has won the doubles point in six times in the past nine matches.

"We are improving in doubles," Bietau said. "We had contributions by lots of people. We are starting to look like we will be making that next step."

K-State would take that momentum into the singles play. Kathy Chuda finished her No. 4 match first, winning 6-1, 6-2. No. 3 Novotna followed with a 6-3, 6-1 win over Beverly Dawson.

Novotna said she was pleased with her performance.

"I served well today," she said. "I think it made a huge difference. I think my serve is always an advantage for me. But today, my placement was better, and I mixed it up a lot."

No. 2 Petra Sedlmajerova's match with Barbara Schrami featured several rallies, but Sedlmajerova had control over the match. She won 6-2, 6-0.

"She liked longer points," Sedlmajerova said of her opponent. "Coach and I talked about how to make the points shorter. I can't allow myself to play the game that she wants to play."

K-State also got victories from No. 5 Paulina Castillejos and No. 6 Hayley McIver.

"This is probably the best team performance of the year so far," Bietau said. "The middle of the lineup really took the ball and ran with it. It erased any question that we would win. We played well in almost every position."

K-State's only loss was from No. 1 singles. Jecminkova was matched up with freshman Irina Tereschenko. Jecminkova won the first set 6-3 and led 2-1 in the second, but Tereschenko would rally to tie the match at a set apiece.

In the third set, Jecminkova was down 5-6, before fighting back to force a third set tie-breaker. She was up 5-3 in the tie breaker before surrendering the next four points to give Tereschenko the victory.

"Alena was not one hundred percent today," Bietau said, "but that's an awful good player Texas has at No. 1. We heard about her, and we saw her for the first time today. She was impressive."

The Wildcats now are 5-4 overall and are undefeated in Big 12. The team continues conference competition by traveling to Baylor this weekend. Last year, K-State beat the Bears when they were ranked No. 16.

"Baylor will definitely be a big match," Novotna said. "I am looking forward to playing them again."

Field of 65 announced for NCAA tournament

By MICHAEL MAROT
The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Stanford, Duke and defending champion Michigan State were selected as No. 1 seeds for the NCAA tournament for the second straight year Sunday, joined at the top of the brackets by Illinois.

The top six conferences dominated the field, receiving 29 of the 34 at-large berths. The Big Ten's seven teams matched the record for the most in the tournament.

The first ever 65-team field starts play Tuesday night in Dayton, Ohio, with Northwestern State facing Winthrop in the opening-round game. The winner between the two lowest-ranked teams advances to play Illinois (24-7) in the Midwest's first round in Dayton on Friday. Stanford (28-2), the unanimous No. 1 team in the AP poll for the last two weeks, is the top seed in the West, while Duke (29-4) plays in the East, and Michigan State (24-4) is in the South.

The No. 2 seeds are Kentucky, North Carolina, Arizona and Iowa State, while the No. 3s are Boston College, Florida, Mississippi and Maryland. UCLA, Oklahoma, Kansas and Indiana were selected as No. 4 seeds.

Following the Big Ten's seven selections were the Atlantic Coast Conference Big 12 and Southeastern Conference with six each. The Big East and Pacific-10 each had five teams chosen.

In addition to Illinois' matchup with the winner of the opening-round game, the games at Dayton on Friday are: No. 8 Tennessee versus No. 9 Charlotte; No. 5 Syracuse versus No. 12 Hawaii; and No. 4 Kansas versus No. 13 Cal State-Northridge.

The other Midwest first-round games will be in Kansas City, Mo., with No. 6 Notre Dame facing No. 11 Xavier; No. 3 Mississippi against No. 14 Iowa; No. 7 Wake Forest playing No. 10 Butler; and No. 2 Arizona, the other No. 1 seed last season, against No. 15 Eastern Illinois. Michigan State begins defense of its title Friday in Memphis, Tenn., against No. 16 Alabama State. In the other games there that day: No. 8 California plays No. 9 Fresno State; No. 5 Virginia faces No. 12

NCAA Conference dates

■ The East Regional will be in Philadelphia on March 22 and 24, the same days the West Regional will be in Anaheim, Calif.
■ The Midwest Regional will be in San Antonio on March 23 and 25, the same days the South Regional will be in Atlanta.
■ The Final Four is March 31 and April 2 in Minneapolis.

Gonzaga; and No. 4 Oklahoma plays No. 13 Indiana State.

The other South first-round games will be played Friday in New Orleans, with No. 6 Texas versus No. 11 Temple; No. 3 Florida versus No. 14 Western Kentucky; No. 7 Penn State versus No. 10 Providence; and No. 2 North Carolina versus No. 15 Princeton.

Duke plays Thursday in Greensboro, N.C., against No. 16 Monmouth.

The other games in that East subregional are: No. 9 Missouri versus No. 8 Georgia, which enters with the most losses ever by an at-large team with its 16-14 record; No. 5 Ohio State versus No. 12 Utah State; and No. 4 UCLA versus No. 13 Hofstra.

In Uniondale, N.Y., on Thursday, No. 6 Southern California faces No. 11 Oklahoma State; No. 3 Boston College plays No. 14 Southern Utah; No. 7 Iowa faces No. 10 Creighton; and No. 2 Kentucky plays No. 15 Holy Cross.

The final subregionals will be in San Diego and Boise, Idaho, on Thursday and Saturday.

Stanford plays No. 16 North Carolina-Greensboro in San Diego, while No. 8 Georgia Tech faces No. 9 St. Joseph's; No. 5 Cincinnati plays No. 12 Brigham Young; and No. 4 Indiana faces No. 13 Kent State.

In Boise, it's No. 6 Wisconsin versus No. 11 Georgia State; No. 3 Maryland versus No. 14 George Mason; No. 7 Arkansas versus No. 10 Georgetown; and No. 2 Iowa State versus No. 15 Hampton.

Five schools — Alabama State, Cal State-Northridge, Hampton, Northwestern State and Southern Utah — are making their first NCAA tournament appearances. Holy Cross, which hasn't been in the field since 1983, ended the longest drought.

Michigan State predicted to win; No. 1 seeds favored

Sixty-five teams are assembling game plans, fans are furiously filling out their brackets and Dick Vitale is beginning his three-week caffeine and ephedrine binge.

It must be NCAA tournament time. Let's take a quick look at this year's bracket.

Let's start our look in the East, where Duke is the top seed. If Missouri can beat a talented Georgia team, it will set up a matchup between Mike Krzyzewski and his former assistant, Missouri's Quinn Snyder. A big question for Duke is if All-America point guard Jason Williams is able to play after severely spraining his ankle against North Carolina.

In the bottom half of the East bracket, Kentucky had to be happy with its draw. The Wildcats are on fire, winning 10 of 12, including an SEC tournament title. Watch for Oklahoma State and Creighton to pull off upsets in the first round.

It is just a hunch, but I would like undermanned Kentucky to upset Duke and head to the Final Four.

The West bracket is by far the easiest. Stanford, the one seed, looks great with only two losses. However, the Cardinals haven't been past the second round of the tournament in the last two years. Indiana and Cincinnati are the weakest four and five seeds in the tournament, and both could be upset.

The other half of the West features Iowa State, fresh off an embarrassing loss to Baylor in the Big 12 tournament, where it looked as bad as my intramural team did in our tournament. The Cyclones could get upset by Georgetown. The Hoyas have a guard, Kevin Braswell, who can play with Jamaal Tinsley.

Put your cash on Maryland coming out of the West. The Terps have been solid all year, and I think they will surprise Stanford.

Top-seed Illinois has a tough draw in the Midwest with KU and Syracuse in its half. KU has to play Cal St.-Northridge in the first round — Cal St. beat UCLA this year. Even if the Hawks win, they likely will have to face the Orangemen whose tricky 2-3 zone has caused them trouble in the tourney before.

In the other half of the Midwest Regional, Arizona is the two seed. The Wildcats have been upset-prone in the past. They should watch out this year, as Eastern Illinois isn't a great team, but it has two of the NCAA top 10 scorers in Henry Domercant and Kyle Hill. Also, Butler will beat Wake Forest, which hasn't been any good since knocking off KU.

I hate to go with number one seeds, but I like Illinois. Guard play is one of the most important things in the tournament, and the Illini have two great ones — Frank Williams and Cory Bradford.

Defending champ Michigan State has the toughest bracket in the South. The top half includes Virginia, Big 12 champion Oklahoma (by the way, OUI has just owned the Big 12 this year) and upset-masters Gonzaga. The 'Zags aren't sneaking up on anybody this year, though, so don't pick them to upset Virginia.

The bottom half of the South bracket is very tough. North Carolina has to be upset about possibly having to play Florida in the Sweet 16 because many thought the Gators would get a two seed. The Gators need to watch out, though, as Western Kentucky shocked Michigan in the tournament a few years ago.

Again, I think it is unlucky to pick number one seeds, but Michigan State will win the South. The Spartans have a great blend of tournament experience and young talent.

So that's my Final Four — Kentucky, Maryland, Illinois and Michigan State. My choice for National Champion is ... Michigan State.

I just think Tom Izzo will have his team ready to play after a tough Big 10 tournament loss.

So, happy spring break, and let the madness begin!

DeNiro, newcomer's performances fail to save movie's weak plot

I want my money back.
With a played-out message about violence and the media and random acts of violence that deter audiences from the storyline, "15 Minutes" will make you wish the movie actually had lasted that long.

Robert DeNiro is Eddie Flemming, New York's premiere homicide detective and is teamed up with Edward Burns ("Saving Private Ryan") Jordy Warsaw, an eager, young fire marshal who wishes to tag along when a series of murders pop up. Little do they know the murderers are right under their noses, a duo of killers from Russia and the Czech Republic (Oleg Taktarov and Karel Rodin) who enjoy filming their crimes.

DeNiro, while typecast as the good cop/bad mafia guy, once again takes on this type of role with ease. Am I the only one who wishes he'd try to tackle another type of role instead of staying in his safety zone of the tough-as-nails policeman and mafia bosses? I'm positive DeNiro could do more. However, his role in this film is, as always, impeccable. Newcomer Burns, meanwhile, nearly steals the scenes from DeNiro.

One of the more controversial (and interesting) roles in the film belongs to Kelsey Grammar, as a corrupt TV journalist who decides to air the killings on television. Grammar's character makes a big statement about journalistic integrity and what is and what is not appropriate for public viewing.

His character is wholly despicable and, while he manages to make TV journalists out to be corrupt and heartless, he nonetheless makes a strong point about those journalists who actually are despicable.

With so many two-dimensional characters and a tired, overdone agenda about violence and the media, it's no wonder that director John Herzfeld had to resort to random, unnecessary violent scenes.

Robert DeNiro, you can do better than this.

NBA game unenhanced

When is an update not an upgrade? When it's "NBA Live 2001."

The latest in EA Sports' storied basketball franchise is, at best, a mixed blessing. Obviously built on the backbone of the previous year's offering, "NBA Live 2001" offers little in the way of innovation, and indeed, suffers mostly because of features removed from the 2000 version.

Gone is the three-point contest. Gone are the custom teams — it's no longer possible to have a team of your choice in your own city. Now you're saddled with the 29 existing franchises (yes, Vancouver counts), whether you like it or not. Gone are several player-editing options: no more eye wear or headbands or other little touches of individuality (and the face-importing doesn't seem to work at all unless you're creating a team of pin-prick-eyed monstrosities; the system works so much better in "NHL 2001").

On the upside, you have more statistical leeway in creating your own players — the game doesn't require custom-made players to be balanced or limited to realistic abilities. If you want a seven-foot, six-inch, 314-pound Goliath who can run the court with Kobe Bryant and nail three-pointers, you can do that. It's a positive step, but not much of one.

The new features? You can execute three-team trades. Wow. No more sleepless nights for me. New "player interactions," which, I've gotta admit, are new and utterly underwhelming (they argue calls, but I've yet to see them celebrate after a basket — at least, not as much as they did last year). Oh, and a soundtrack with Montel Jordan. So? You can customize the in-game music to your liking with EA Sports' "ditty importer," so I don't see this as a selling point. There aren't as many enhancements as there have been retardations of the NBA Live series with this release.

"NBA LIVE 2001"

GAME REVIEW BY KEN WELLS

That's not to say this game is all bad. There's quite a bit to enjoy about it. There's the realistic feel of the game play, the impressive statistics, the season/franchise play, nice flexibility with replay angles... But the problem is, all of this was in last year's version, complete with more options. And last I saw, "NBA Live 2000" was on sale dirt cheap.

Oh, and file this under "A" for "atrocity" — all of my customized players are K-State alumni. The play-by-play commentator will occasionally refer to each of them as "the former Kansas Jayhawk." (And the "Madden 2001" crew misspelled "Wichita" as "Witchita." EA Sports has no love for the Sunflower State). And the interface — trying to drag a scroll bar to choose a college is one of the most annoying things you'll have to do on a computer. A drop box would've been an intelligent choice for however many colleges are in EA Sports' database — but the scroll bar just sucks. Dumb idea. And for a game released months after either PlayStation version (and halfway through the NBA season), it's just plain sad.

Honestly, this still is the best PC basketball game out there, due entirely to a lack of competition. Taken on its own, it's a solid basketball game. But in the context of the previous version, this is one shoddy piece of work. It's a downgrade, and one you shouldn't bother with. Hunt down "NBA Live 2000" and overlook this version. It's a marketing ploy, not a new game. Don't waste your time.

Acting, action scenes make memorable film

I can say, with the utmost confidence, that this is one of the best movies I have seen in my entire life.

"CROUCHING TIGER, HIDDEN DRAGON"

MOVIE REVIEW BY CORBIN H. CRABLE

"Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon," which was released in 2000, finally made its way to smaller cities after receiving six Academy Award nominations. This pioneering film is done entirely in Mandarin and is subtitled in English.

The film tells the tale of two warriors, Li Mu Bai (Chow Yun Fat, "Anna and the King") and Shu Lien (Michelle Yeoh, "Tomorrow Never Dies") who are in pursuit of a mystical sword that has been stolen by Jen (Ziyi Zhang), the 18-year-old daughter of a nobleman, who is a physical match for her adult peers.

With a colorful cast of diverse characters, these three obviously shine and dominate the movie with their presence and excellent acting abilities.

The fighting sequences will be what draws audiences into the film initially. The scenes are almost choreographed and are just as graceful as dancing, yet the fighting scenes will keep the viewer's excitement with their lightning-fast pace.

The movie also deals with several issues at once, and it does an excellent job of tying them in. Life, death, forbidden love, loyalty, honor and trust are among the issues addressed in the storyline, and they all are addressed somehow; they're not just vague references, and they are not simply tossed aside after being mentioned.

Those who can't appreciate the lessons these issues offer, however, will be taken by the element of fantasy in the film. The main characters have the ability to fly, and audiences will marvel at the elements of wonder and magic this adds to the fighting scenes. Similarly, the plot itself seems like that of a fairy tale.

The best part about "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon," however, is that it just might break the barriers between mainstream American films and foreign films. American audiences, thanks to this movie, might develop an appreciation for the rich cultures of other countries through films such as this.

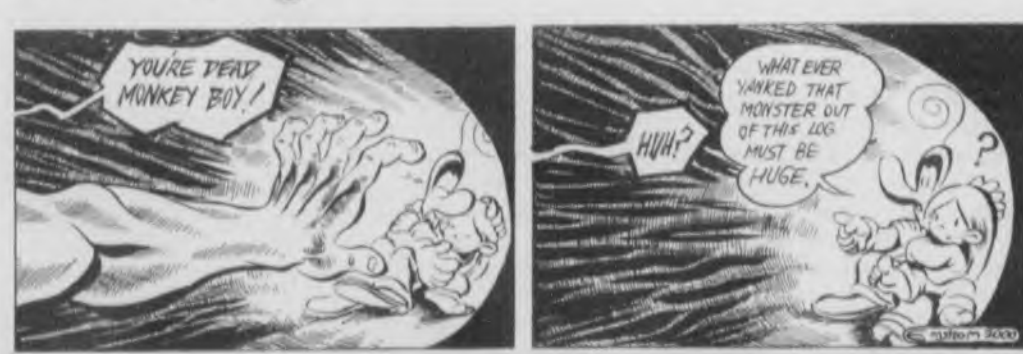

In that regard, "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" has taken a bold, much-needed first step and hopefully will enchant audiences for many more years.

off to spend time together," Margene said.

Jason said he's glad he can be home on the weekends so Margene can get more done.

"I can actually go to the grocery store by myself when he's home," Margene said.

The couple have led busy lives since the beginning of their marriage. They married when Margene was 19 and Jason was 21. Margene was entering her second year at K-State, and Jason was taking time off between high school and college.

During their first year of marriage, Jason was living in Kansas City, Mo., for a while, and Margene was living in Manhattan.

She would drive to visit him Thursdays. Before Blake was born, Margene would take around 20 hours a semester and was a substitute teacher.

"There always has to be something to keep us busy," she said.

Margene and Jason are well aware their lifestyles are different from typical college students.

"I definitely stick out when I'm pushing a stroller around on campus," Margene said. "I feel looked at when I walk around campus, pregnant."

Jason said that in his classes, his friends joke around that he's the old, married man.

"I overhear conversations about people going out and going to parties. It's different because any spare time I have goes to family,"

he said.

When Margene got engaged during her first year of college, she said the women in the residence halls were shocked.

But, she said their reaction didn't faze her.

"I'm not easily swayed," Margene said. "I was raised very family-oriented."

The couple said they don't have any regrets about their decisions.

"It's nice to already have a support system in place," Margene said. "We have shared roles in everything, and it's been a joint effort to get through school."

Jason said marriage and family have put a different perspective on life.

"It helps to prioritize things better. I can really focus on what needs to be focused on."

The monolith was removed from City Hall last year at the request of City Commission because it violated separation of church and state.

MCC was able to obtain the monolith with donations from 360 churches, businesses and individuals, Stanford said because of the number of people who contributed, the school is ready to move forward with the project.

"There are a lot of people that are looking forward to the uncovering of the display," she said. "It really is going to be a unifying force on our campus."

MCC has established a dedication date of May 4 to coincide with other activities at the college.

on money from student privilege fees, the only setback they've faced is the campuswide hiring freeze.

"Now we can't recruit when there are vacancies until we get approval from the vice president," Zweimiller said.

Lafene has five positions available, and Zweimiller said they have received approval to fill all of them.

"We're moving forward on things," he said.
